Select Ferns For Fine Store Trade

We offer a grand lot of exceptionally well-grown plants of the different varieties of NEPHROLEPIS, which will be found one of the best selling and most profitable plants that florists can handle.

Our stock is in unusually fine shape, and we will guarantee it will please the most exacting, as it is exceptionally good value at the prices quoted.

IMPROVED ELEGANTISSIMA. The finest of all this type. It was introduced by us in 1905. This form of Elegantissima has been greately improved, and shows no tendency to revert to the Boston, making it the most valuable fern of this type. Strong plants, 4-inch pots, $3.00 per dozen; 6-inch, $6.00 to $9.00 per dozen, according to size; 8-inch, $12.00 to $18.00 per dozen, according to size.

SUPERBISSIMA. Introduced by us in 1908. A very unique and distinct novelty. Its distinguishing characteristics are its dark green foliage and dense growth. Fronds are very heavily imbricated, making them very dense and compact. Strong plants, 4-inch pots, $3.00 per dozen; 6-inch, $6.00 to $9.00 per dozen, according to size; 8-inch, $12.00 to $18.00 per dozen, according to size.

BOSTONIENSIS, PIERSONI, WHITMANI, SCOTTII. Extra fine plants, 6-inch pots, $6.00 per dozen; 8-inch pans, $12.00 per dozen.

The Market.

Trade was good for Thanksgiving, and with moderate prices stock was in good demand. Roses were plentiful and brought $1 to $1.50 per dozen. Carnations were scarce and brought 75 cents per dozen. Chrysanthemums sold at $1.50 to $4 per dozen. Everything considered, the florists were well satisfied.

Various Notes.

The Blackman Floral Co. did a fine business and was in with a good supply of all cut flowers. Business has been good right along since Thanksgiving, with prospects of no let up till after the holidays. This firm will soon erect another house 25x125 feet.

Niednagel & Sons are very busy these days. Their roses and carnations are looking good, with a nice crop coming on for Christmas. Nice batches of poinsettias and Begonia Gloire de Lorraine were noted, which will be ready for the holidays.

Nellie Goodge says that trade Thanksgiving was good, her store being cleaned out of everything in flowers. The carnations are looking fine. A nice batch of lilies was seen and will be in for Christmas. She will put some beds in a cellar and plant them to mushrooms.

Ben Kramer reports business as excellent since Thanksgiving and is looking forward to a busy month. E. L. F.

ANDERSON, IND.—The Indiana Union Traction Co. is building a greenhouse for its private use, near the company's central power plant in this city. It will be heated by exhaust steam from the power plant.

OMAHA, NEB.—The florists of this city and Council Bluffs are considering the project of holding a flower show in the fall or winter of next year. They argue that there is no reason why they should not have a successful show, since Omaha is a flower center and the Wilcox greenhouses at Council Bluffs are among the largest flower greenhouses in the Missouri valley. Manager Gillan, of the Auditorium, is actually encouraging the plan.

Canaan, Conn., November 23, 1909.

Mr. Godfrey Aschmann, Philadelphia, Pa.

Dear Sir: The plants which I purchased of you arrived in good condition and are very satisfactory. I am, yours truly, (Miss) Rose Adams, Grower of Annual and Perennial Flowers.

A View of one of Godfrey Aschmann's Gloire de Lorraine Houses, taken Nov. 18, 1909.

Have Lorraines to Beat the Band. Enough for All

Lorraine, Lorraine, none like this e'er yet seen,
Flowers bright like topaz, leaves with emerald sheen,
Jeweled bouquets, peerless, transcendent, fair,
Matchless and charming, none with them compare.
Buy yours of me, and sell as works of art;
Worthy a place in palace, home or mart.

Begonia Gloire de Lorraine. Have a whole house full of them in 6-in. sizes, in first-class condition, ready to bloom now and for the holidays. Our experiments in the past in raising and cultivating this early Christmas plant put us in the foreground and now we will be able to deliver them in a much improved condition, with flowers much brighter in color and hardier, standing shipping well. Everybody seeing them, even enemies, must admire them. They are cracker-jacks; 7-in. pots, $1.25 to $1.50; 6-in. pots, 50c, 75c to $1.00. The 75c and $1.00 sizes are almost as big as 8-in.; 3-in. pots, 15c.

Made-up Plants, 8-in. pans, with 3 3-in. Begonia Gloire de Lorraine in center, edged with Asparagus plumosus and Sprengeri, or assorted dish ferns, very attractive. Sell on sight, 60c per pan.

Begonia Flambeau, 4-in., 15c; 5¼-in., 20c.

Begonias. New improved Erfordii and Gracilis, 5¼-in., $2.50 per doz.

TESTIMONY FROM MICHELL.

I personally visited Mr. Aschmann's greenhouses September 21, 1909, and found that the Araucarias, Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, Boston, Whitmani, Scottii, Amerpohlii, Todeaoides ferns, Rubber Plants, Kentias and Arecas are indeed A No. 1. Have never seen any better plants. The Gloire de Lorraine begonias in 6-in. pots are a perfect wonder, bushy and clean. Have never seen his greenhouses filled with plants as good as they are now.

F. J. MICHELL, of the firm of Henry F. Michell Co., 1018 Market St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Four Houses Filled with the Best. With What? Sure, with ARAUCARIAS, Our Specialty in bloom for Christmas, in fine condition, already forced for Christmas Trade. All now showing color, with open flowers and are placed in cold houses ready for shipment.

Remember for Christmas forcing we have to select the finest, strongest and healthiest plants. Weak, delinquent plants will not force successfully for Christmas. We have the following varieties for Xmas: Mme. Petrick, the best, new, earliest, double-pink variety in existence—never fails to bloom—very scarce and hard to get in Europe; Deutsche Perle (double white) and Vervaeneana (double rose variegated), a well known standard variety, 75c, $1.00, $1.25, $1.50 to $2.00 each.

In Easter varieties, in larger sizes, we have Bernard Andre alba (white), Niobe (white), Helene Thelemann (rose), Empress of India, Apollo (red), De Schryveriana (double variegated), Dr. Moore (pink), Mme. Van der Cruyssen, Louise Van Houtte (double large red), Simon Mardner, Vervaeneana, $1.25, $1.50 $2.00, to $2.50 each. In smaller sizes we have Simon Mardner, Van der Cruyssen, Niobe, Empress of India, Deutsche Perle, Vervaeneana, De Schryveriana, 50c, 75c, $1.00 to $1.25; John Llewelyn, 75c, $1.00, $1.25, $1.50 to $2.00 each.

We have a house full of Nephrolepis Todeaoides. This fern is a big improvement over all the crested ferns, 5½-in., 40c; 6-in., 50c to 60c; 7-in., as big as a bushel basket or washtub, 75c, $1.00 to $1.25.

Ferns. Nephrolepis Todeaoides and Boston, 5, 5½ and 6-in. pots, 35c, 40c, 50c. Whitmani, 7-in., as big as a wash-tub, 75c to $1.00. Boston, Scottii and Todeaoides, 7-in., 75c, $1.00, $1.25 to $1.50 each; as big as a washtub.

Ferns, Scottii, 6-in., 50c to 60c; 7-in., 75c; 7-in., as big as a bushel basket, $1.00.

Ferns, Wilsoni, bushy, 3 ferns in a 6-in. pan, 25c and 35c per pan.

Ferns, Wimsetti and Victoriae (silver leaf fern), 3 plants in a 6-in. pan, very attractive, 30c per pan.

Primula Kewensis, new yellow novelty, rapid grower, flowers stand for months when in bloom, 4-in., 15c; 5-in., 20c.

Primula Chinensis. John F. Rupp's best strain, assorted, 5¼-in., in bloom, $2.50 to $3.00 per doz.

ALLENTOWN, PA.—John F. Horn & Bro. had a supply of chrysanthemums this season which were of such fine quality as to attract the attention of the trade in many surrounding places. It is said that a Philadelphia florist offered to buy the entire stock, but could not make his offer tempting enough.

WORCESTER, MASS.—When the will of the late Hermann F. A. Lange was filed for probate, it was found that the bulk of his estate, valued at $125,000, had been bequeathed to his two sons, Albert H. and Carl C. Lange, who were also named as executors. The children of the second wife receive $5,000 each. The estate consists of $75,000 in real estate and $50,000 in personal property.

Horticultural Books

We can supply any of the following books at the prices noted, postpaid, and any other book at publishers' price:

Pronouncing Dictionary.
A list of plant names and the botanical terms most frequently met with in articles on trade topics, with the correct pronunciation for each. 35 cents

Hardy Perennials and Old-fashioned Garden Flowers.
By J. WOOD. Describing the most desirable plants for borders, shrubberies, etc., foliage and flowering. Illustrated. $2.00

The American Carnation.
By C. W. WARD. Invaluable to the carnation grower. All departments of the business are treated in a thoroughly practical manner. This book is the work of a careful, studious grower of ripe experience. Fully illustrated. $3.50

Tomato Culture.
By W. W. TRACY, U. S. Dept. of Agriculture. The book deals with every phase of tomato culture and was written for the man who wants the latest and most complete information on the subject. Cloth. 150 pages. Illustrated. 50 cents

The Forcing Book.
By L. H. BAILEY. In this work the author has compiled in handy form the cream of all the available information on the subject of forcing vegetables under glass. In addition to this, the experience of many practical growers in different localities is furnished. $1.25

Bulbs and Tuberous Rooted Plants.
By C. L. ALLEN. A complete history, description, methods of propagation and full directions for the successful culture of bulbs in the garden, dwelling or greenhouse. The illustrations which embellish this work have been drawn from nature, and have been engraved especially for this book. Cloth. $1.50

Insects and Insecticides.
By CLARENCE M. WEED, D. SC. A practical manual concerning noxious insects and the methods of preventing their injuries. Profusely illustrated. A generally useful handbook on noxious insects. It covers the whole field of insect pests very thoroughly and is especially valuable for its complete and up-to-date methods of fighting insects. The work is intensely practical. All the important insect pests are described and remedies for them, and methods of preventing their injuries described in detail. Cloth. $1.50

Handbook of Plants and General Horticulture.
By PETER HENDERSON. This new edition comprises about 50 per cent more genera than the former one, and embraces the botanical name, derivation, natural order, etc., together with a short history of the different genera, concise instructions for their propagation and culture, and all the leading local or common English names, together with a comprehensive glossary of botanical and technical terms. Plain instructions are also given for the cultivation of the principal vegetables, fruits and flowers. Cloth. $3.00

Henderson's Picturesque Gardens and Ornamental Gardening.
By CHARLES HENDERSON. A volume containing half-tone illustrations of the prettiest and most famous gardens and parks of the world, vividly portraying lawn, garden and landscape effects, plant and tree groupings, decorative bedding, herbaceous gardens and borders, formal gardens, lawn gardens, Italian, Japanese and English gardens, rock gardens, wild gardens, bog gardens, subtropical gardens, sunken and terrace gardens, rosariums, hardy ferneries, arches, columns, festoons, etc., picturesquely draped with vines, as well as numerous other garden embellishments. Each illustration is described and explained. Cloth. $2.50

Greenhouse Management.
By PROF. L. R. TAFT, of Michigan Agricultural College. A manual for florists and flower lovers on the forcing of flowers, vegetables and fruits in greenhouses, and the propagation and care of house plants. It treats of all the plants commonly cultivated by florists and amateurs, and explains in a thorough manner the methods that have been found most successful in growing them. Particular attention is paid to the growing of cut flowers, the growing of fruits under glass, etc. Of special value will be the directions for treating plants when attacked by insects and fungi. The preparation of the soil, the use of various manures, composts and fertilizers, watering, ventilating and heating receive careful and minute attention. Cloth. 400 pages. $1.50

THE possibility of a big railroad tie-up by a strike early in the new year makes it the part of wisdom to see that the coal bins are filled to their greatest capacity.

DIAMETER OF SMOKESTACK.

What diameter of smokestack would be required for four boilers, tubular, return flue, six feet in diameter by eighteen feet long? A. R.

Without knowing the number and size of the boiler tubes it is not possible to estimate the size of the boilers. It is also well to know the size of the grates, as well as the openings, in estimating how large a smokestack is required. If the boilers do not have a capacity of over 200 horse-power each, it is probable that a chimney five feet in diameter will prove large enough.

HOUSES ADJOINING DWELLING.

In this latitude, the northern part of Oklahoma, is it preferable to build a greenhouse north and south, or east and west? Would the heat from 7,500 feet of glass at the south of my dwelling have any effect on the temperature in the dwelling in summer?

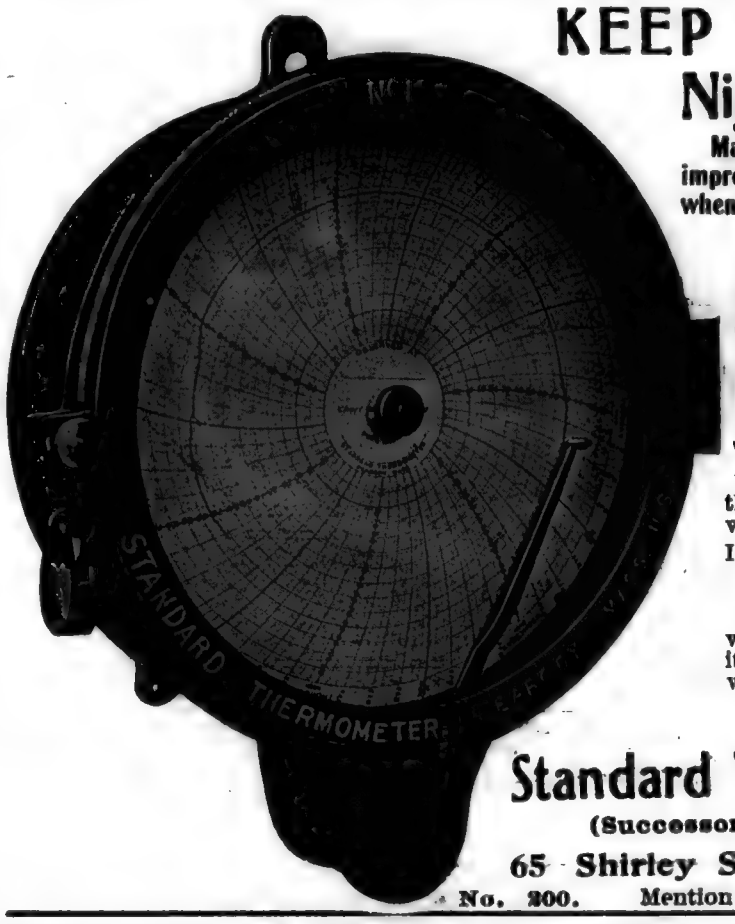
I have a basement under my dwelling, 30x34 feet, and eight feet from floor to ceiling. I wish to build two greenhouses, each 25x100, twenty feet south of my residence, and heat both with the same hot water plant. Would it be better to put the boiler in the basement or in the greenhouse, and would there be any bad odor from the boiler if placed in the basement?

If I put a partition in one of the houses, can I have a different temperature for roses and carnations? Which two of these three flowers, roses, carnations and mums, will do best in the same room?

W. R. M.

Especially in the more southern states, it is advisable to have the houses run north and south and of course the even-span construction should be used.

It is not likely that the heated air in the greenhouse would have any marked effect upon the temperature within the dwelling, unless there were a direct connection between the two, but the heat radiated from the glass would raise the temperature of the wall of the house. Probably the most noticeable result would be that the location of the greenhouse along the south side of the dwelling would shut off the cool summer breezes from the south and southwest.



While it is not likely that there would be any serious trouble from odors from the boiler if placed in the basement of the dwelling, there would almost certainly be more or less smoke and dust from the coal and ashes, which would work their way into the dwelling unless care was taken to cut off the basement completely from the floor above. It will then be largely a question of whether one wishes to go to the extra expense of building a fire and coal room outside, or suffer the annoyance mentioned.

There will be no difficulty about dividing a house by a partition so that it will be possible to maintain different temperatures in the two rooms thus formed, but the efficiency of the house will be slightly reduced by the partition. To secure 50 degrees in one house and 60 in the other, there should be one-third more radiating surface in the latter than in the former. The chrysanthemums will do better in the room with the carnations than with the roses.

PIPING FOR HOTBEDS.

I wish to extend the heat to my hotbeds, but before doing so will ask your advice as to the best arrangement of the pipes.

I have a concrete frame, 6x36 feet, for six sashes, and I wish to run hot water pipes from my boiler room underground, a distance of only about eight feet, to the hotbed frame. I am undecided as to the best method of placing these pipes. I should like to know how much 2-inch pipe will be required, and whether to place the pipe underground in the beds, or on a level with the ground at the upper and lower ends of the bed, or under the glass at the upper and lower ends. I prefer to use 2-inch pipe. Will you

MARTIN GRATE CO. 283 Dearborn St. CHICAGO

Metallic Thermometer "A"

SIZE—8 inches high, 4 inches wide, 2 inches deep. Case made of cast aluminum, highly finished.

This little instrument is an accurate, fully tested thermometer showing the correct temperature at all times, and combines a device which will ring a bell at your bedside when the greenhouse gets either too hot or too cold.

The florist needs protection against the overheating of his greenhouses as well as a protection against cold, for which we can highly recommend our type "A." This device serves both purposes, and at the same time indicates, as previously stated, the actual temperature in his greenhouse.

We guarantee that actual results will at all times be obtained. This device has been subjected to the severest tests in our laboratory, for over two years, and at the same time has given entire satisfaction, under all conditions, to many users in the trade.

All you have to do is to set the pointers at the highest and lowest temperatures you want, and the thermometer will do the rest. It will ring a good, loud bell when either point is reached.

This device saves all worry over trouble from sudden temperature changes.

Investigate it today.

The "National" Differential Temperature Alarm

SIZE—4 inches in diameter, 1½ inch deep. Casing made of Sheet Aluminum.

A sudden cold snap, or a rapid thaw, may mean hundreds of dollars' loss because your greenhouse gets too hot or too cold before you realize the sudden change that has occurred.

Protect yourself from such danger

Our Differential Temperature Alarm is specially designed for florists' use and is guaranteed to give absolute protection from the dangers before stated. Set the pointers at the highest and lowest temperatures desired and this device will positively ring a bell at your bedside when either point is reached.

Over 2,000 of these instruments are now giving complete satisfaction to florists throughout the country.

It is constructed of the very best material available for the purpose, and contains no complicated mechanism; hence serves its purpose a lifetime.

The pointers on face of instrument can be set so as to allow a difference between a possible increase or decrease of temperature of only two degrees. All that is necessary is to change position of pointers by loosening set screw in center so as to set the pointers or hands on face of dial; then tighten said set screw.

We also manufacture separate instruments; No. 1, to ring a bell when the house gets too hot; No. 2, to ring a bell when the house gets too cold. Of course, the most useful is the instrument illustrated above, which is a combination of both No. 1 and No. 2.

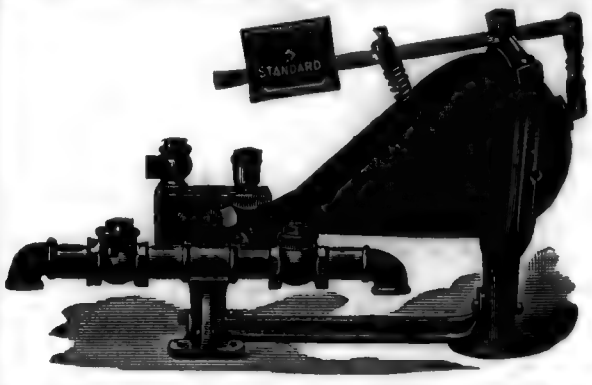
kindly advise me which method is the best, or can you offer some better suggestion? What amount of pipe would be advisable? These hotbeds are to be used for general stock, such as cauliflower, lettuce, etc. I am located in northern Maryland. J. B. R.

If it is merely desired to maintain a temperature of, say, 50 degrees in the hotbed, it would only be necessary to run a 2-inch flow pipe along the back (higher), and then carry the return back on the front side. Whether the pipes should be close to the glass, will depend upon the height of the sides above the soil. It will be best to have them as far from the glass as possible and not come within eight to twelve inches of the soil, the latter height being preferable where the sides are eighteen inches high. If so low as to touch the leaves of the plants, some injury would result from the drying out and burning of the edges of the leaves.

It will, however, be desirable to have some bottom heat, and for this purpose two lines of return pipes should be carried in the bottom of the bed, about eight inches below the surface. If this is done, it will not be necessary to have a return pipe upon the wall of the bed and the flow pipe should then be upon the south wall. The only objection to using the plan first outlined is that when the two underground returns are added there will be more radiation than is desirable, if 2-inch pipes are used. With a 2-inch flow on the back wall, the use of 1½-inch pipes for two underground and one front wall return will give the proper radiation.



A WATERTIGHT PIT.

"One of the most difficult, and often serious, matters growers have to battle against is water in the boiler-pit. I have just had a visit from a colleague who had a tale of woe to tell me on this account, and this induced me to write a few notes about making stokeholes," says a writer in the Horticultural Advertiser (English).

"Builders will insist upon treating this job in a careless way, with the result that the water cannot be kept out. The fault is, that the stokehole is built like a brick tank, cementing the inside.

"I will assume that we have to build a stokehole under adverse conditions, that we actually have water standing in the hole. If we can build successfully under such conditions, it should be an easy matter to make a good job when the place is dry. otherwise sinking and cracking of the walls is sure to follow sooner or later. Having, as I said, water in the hole, we dump our concrete in dry. It is best to have a pump fixed in the hole to keep out water not necessary for working the job. Having shot in our concrete and made level, we put on this a 2-inch layer of cement; on this the bricks are laid for the floor. The walls are built in the usual way, leaving a space of a couple of inches between the walls and the bricks, which space is filled in with concrete, say three parts sharp sand and one of cement. As the work proceeds let the water rise up to the level of the work, preventing any pressure of water from the outside. Get a couple of men inside the hole. If the water rises too quickly keep the water level with the work. Have the outside space well filled up with cement. The weight of the water will help to settle the bottom firm, and the cement will set under water equally hard. After setting, the water can be baled out of the hole, and nothing but careless workmanship will make the job a failure.

"For the solid concrete bottom any stuck—such as the Americans call it—may be used, coarse gravel, broken-up bricks, clinkers, broken-up pots, provided they are clean, i. e., free from soil. Mixed dry with cement.

"Where time is limited, and the boiler pits to be fixed almost at once, strong soda water for mixing the cement may be used. Builders will tell you that it will not last, but not long ago the writer was speaking to a gasfitter, laying new gas mains, and he was saying how well such cement had stood the test of fixing hot water pipes in a greenhouse."

WASHINGTON.

The Market.

Business last week was quite brisk, all florists having more or less decorating to do, although the weather has been quite warm.

In the plant line, Lorraine takes the lead, but cyclamen and azaleas have made their appearance.

Cut stock sold well all the week, with only a few white mums to be had. Carnations and valley were the most sought after.

Various Notes.

The bowling team of the Washington Florists' Club attended the flower show in Baltimore, Thursday evening, December 2. They report an interesting and successful exhibition, and a pleasant trip.

The music at the establishment of F. H. Kramer continues to attract big crowds. Mr. Kramer is doing a large business in the novelty line, having just received a large shipment. He reports business as exceedingly satisfactory.

Friday evening, December 3, Otto Bauer and W. F. Gude attended the exhibition at Baltimore.

Some quite elaborate pieces were made for the funeral of Richard Henry Lynn, president of the American National Bank, this city, who was drowned while duck hunting in Cecil county, Md. One of the most elaborate pieces, a casket cover of white roses and violets, was executed by the Washington Florists' Co.

December 11 is the date set for the horse show, an annual social event which is coming to mean a great deal to the florist.

A Catalogue Worth Having

Our new Boiler Catalogue is a valuable book to any florist, large or small, and everybody who has a greenhouse ought to have one of them by all means. This catalogue tells you all you want to know about greenhouse heating and tells it in a simple manner, so that everything is easily understood.

One of our large customers wrote for six copies to give to his men—he said it would make them valuable employees.

Get the Benefit of Big Prices in the early market

The secret of success in market gardening is earliness. The Sunlight Double Glass Sash makes it easy to have the earliest and best plants. They will be ready as soon as the field is ready to receive them. The resulting crops will get the top-notch prices.

Sunlight Double Glass Sash lets in all the light all the time. Mats and boards for covering are no longer needed saving expense and labor.

Throughout the entire day the plants get benefit of the stimulating sunlight and earlier, better crops result.

The two layers of glass do the work. A 5/8-inch cushion of dry air between acts as a transparent blanket over the plants and protects them even in zero weather.

What The U-Bar Is

In the U-Bar Construction we encase the wooden sash bar with a galvanized steel U shaped bar; the combined member being no larger than the smallest sash bar used in other constructions.

U-Bar greenhouses are the best greenhouses built, because they eliminate all heavy iron rafters, many lateral supports, place the bars farther apart, while still giving a house of wonderful rigidity and durability.

THE WEEKLY FLORISTS' REVIEW

Christmas Number

Metallic Thermometer "A"

Size—8 inches high, 4 inches wide, 2 inches deep. Case made of cast aluminum, highly finished.

This little instrument is an accurate, fully tested thermometer showing the correct temperature at all times, and combines a device which will ring a bell at your bedside when the greenhouse gets either too hot or too cold.

The florist needs protection against the overheating of his greenhouses as well as a protection against cold, for which we can highly recommend our type "A." This device serves both purposes, and at the same time indicates, as previously stated, the actual temperature in his greenhouse.

We guarantee that actual results will at all times be obtained. This device has been subjected to the severest tests in our laboratory, for over two years, and at the same time has given entire satisfaction, under all conditions, to many users in the trade.

All you have to do is to set the pointers at the highest and lowest temperatures you want, and the thermometer will do the rest. It will ring a good, loud bell when either point is reached.

This device saves all worry over trouble from sudden temperature changes.

Investigate it today.

The "National" Differential Temperature Alarm

Size—4 inches in diameter, 1½ inch deep. Casing made of Sheet Aluminum.

A sudden cold snap, or a rapid thaw, may mean hundreds of dollars' loss because your greenhouse gets too hot or too cold before you realize the sudden change that has occurred.

Protect yourself from such danger

Our Differential Temperature Alarm is specially designed for florists' use and is guaranteed to give absolute protection from the dangers before stated. Set the pointers at the highest and lowest temperatures desired and this device will positively ring a bell at your bedside when either point is reached.

Over 2,000 of these instruments are now giving complete satisfaction to florists throughout the country.

It is constructed of the very best material available for the purpose, and contains no complicated mechanism; hence serves its purpose a lifetime.

The pointers on face of instrument can be set so as to allow a difference between a possible increase or decrease of temperature of only two degrees. All that is necessary is to change position of pointers by loosening set screw in center so as to set the pointers or hands on face of dial; then tighten said set screw.

We also manufacture separate instruments; No. 1, to ring a bell when the house gets too hot; No. 2, to ring a bell when the house gets too cold. Of course, the most useful is the instrument illustrated above, which is a combination of both No. 1 and No. 2.

Let us send you our catalogue of styles and prices. A postal will bring it

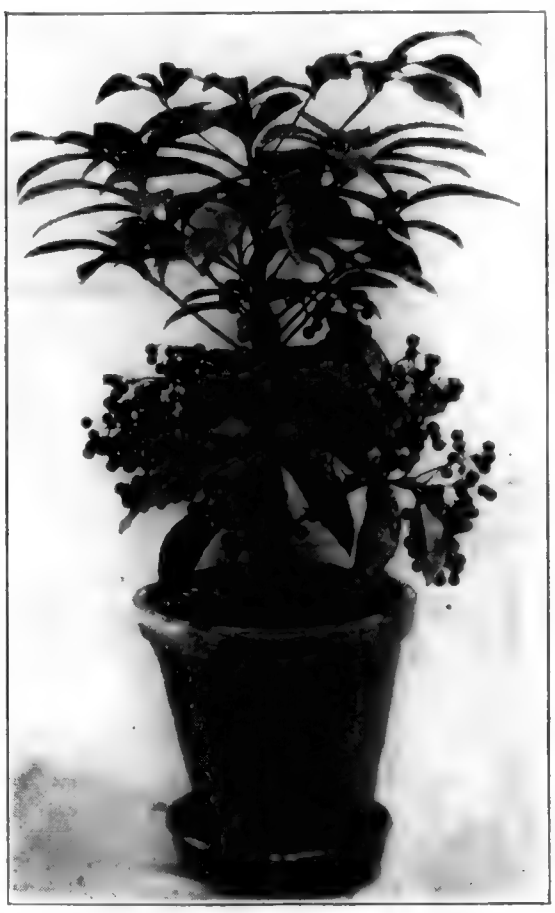
CHRISTMAS

SEASONABLE MATERIALS.

The Holiday Touch on Everything.

Casting about for material with which to brighten almost every basket, box or package which leaves the shop at Christmas time, we find nearly everywhere red immortelles, holly, poinsettias, natural and artificial, and plenty of scarlet ribbon and chiffon. Besides these, there are reds and crimsons of many shades, all kings in their own realms, but suspicious of each other. Among these reds are the red magnolia and beech leaves, coleus foliage, crimson cyclamen, red Chinese primulas and the coral hue of the Begonia Gloire de Lorraine. Of these different reds the most called for are scarlets, which combine best with lycopodium and laurel wreathing, pine or cedar greens and trees, and fancy potted evergreens.

Just how to impart the Christmas touch to each of many things, is the question. By this statement we do not mean that all the plants must be decorated gaudily, but somewhere in the covering of the pot, in the wrapping or addressing of the package, let there be a suggestion of something Christmas-like. Decorations on a plant itself should be few and modest, for the plant is the main thing and not the decoration. The decoration exists for the plant, not the plant for the decoration.



Any decoration which shall add slightly to the appearance of the plant is admissible. As an example, small cones tied on the tips of the araucaria whorls with red baby ribbon form a natural and logical decoration. Some unfortunate people, with more pocketbook than taste, buy bows of ribbon with plants attached to them, or baskets swathed in satin ribbon and chiffon. Too much is as bad as "dinkiness."

Combinations, Bad and Good.

Here are a few color recipes which are too often seen, but let them be slated with the "Don'ts": Colored cyclamen with Begonia Gloire de Lorraine; colored cyclamen with holly, poinsettias, or primulas, except white; colored primroses with Lorraine, poinsettias, or holly; red magnolia or beech leaves with scarlet immortelles; red roses with holly.

The wreath arrangements may be varied almost indefinitely. We can have plain lycopodium, or lycopodium with holly scattered or in one cluster, with or without ribbon. We can have lycopodium with scarlet immortelles as an inside outline, as scattered bunches or as one large cluster, or we can display a plain lycopodium with a stylish bow of ribbon that will outclass any of the above. In the pine sections of the country neat wreaths may be made of the boughs and trimmed with the cones, with or without ribbon. Pine wreaths with artificial poinsettias are showy and inexpensive, or an all poinsettia wreath would serve the same purpose.

Other decorations for a plain lycopodium wreath: A single strand of ribbon—scarlet, of course—drawn through and twisted here and there where it is necessary to fasten it, and ending in a hanging bow and streamer; knots of baby ribbon scattered at intervals around the wreath, with a spray of mistletoe in each; a cluster of small cones and a spray of holly, all tied to the wreath in one place with a bunch of No. 5 scarlet ribbon; for cemetery or memorial purposes, an extra wide lycopodium wreath, with a small, solid cross worked on its surface of scarlet immortelles; for a laurel or green magnolia wreath, a tie of scarlet ribbon with a generous lot of bows shaped like the leaves; for a red magnolia wreath, a formal bow and long streamers of Nile green ribbon, with a spray of mistletoe in the bow; an all holly wreath with poinsettias; an immense wreath of any of the above kinds, tied with a cluster of small wreaths and a large ribbon tie.

The Ardisia.

A Christmas Tree.

For a display tree: Trim a Christmas tree with red and green candles, moss baskets of holly or small flowers, poinsettias, cones, clusters of scarlet baby ribbon, and dainty flower boxes with Santa Claus stickers. Bank around the base with ferns and blooming plants. Trim the background with wild smilax and poinsettias. Overhead hang clusters of arbor-vitæ bells, ringing wildly. The arbor-vitæ bells may be made over an ordinary bell frame and provided with a red immortelle clapper. Bell frames may also be covered with the artificial poinsettias, pine boughs or lycopodium.

Baskets are receptacles for plants and flowers and, as such, should be kept in their proper place and not overdecorated. Little or no ribbon, with a neutral color in the basket, is the most tasteful. With a dull colored basket the brilliant flowers and foliage will show to a decided advantage. A slightly discolored basket may be covered with holly and filled so as to look fresh and new. Coleus plants and scarlet geraniums are good color helps, along with poinsettias, holly, etc. Fiber ribbons in red and green are useful ties for rustic baskets and pots, while rosettes of baby ribbon and butterflies of scarlet chiffon are highly ornamental for the finer and daintier baskets.

Suggestions for Baskets.

We see lots of plant baskets for Christmas stock, but for special orders cut flowers may be used in combination with plants for the better class of trade. A cluster of flowers tied on the handle with the card is a good touch to such a basket.

For instance, how do these sound? A basket of adiantum plants with the handle trimmed with pink roses; a rustic basket with Pteris tremula or similar fern, with a holly-trimmed handle and a scarlet cord to tie on the card, or a fiber ribbon rosette low on each side; an all Begonia Lorraine basket, with a high handle trimmed with a wrapping of Nile green satin ribbon about halfway down on each side, with plain streamers hanging and mistletoe drawn into the ends in a tight knot; a basket of crimson cyclamen, the handle decorated with a tie of American Beauty ribbon, enclosing a bud or two of the same rose; a hamper basket of twig used as a box for a handsome bunch of violets, tied with violet cord and a bunch of mistletoe caught in the outside tie; a hamper of pink roses, with a Nile green cord wrapping; a dark twig hamper, lined with holly and filled as a box would be, with scarlet carnations, tied with green or scarlet cord and sealed with a Christmas sticker; a choice fernery filled and delivered in a hamper; around the fernery lay in holly and mistletoe and wrap with a poinsettia on the outside where the lid is fastened down.

I wish you all a merry and a busy Christmas. Gertrude Blair.

THE ARDISIA.

One of the merits of the ardisia is that it has great enduring qualities and to lovers of house plants there are few other subjects which will make more satisfactory Christmas gifts. You can recommend the ardisia to any customer looking for a Christmas remembrance for the lady who dotes on grandmother's garden.

The ardisia shown in the illustration on page 21 was not in an ordinary flower pot; far be it from such. This was in a special green glazed pottery affair, similar in shape to the ordinary flower pot, but of a color almost matching the green of the ardisia foliage. A good many florists would add a holly red ribbon up in the top of the plant.

PLANT HAMPERS.

In the leading flower stores at Christmas and Easter nothing sells better than hampers of plants, the poinsettia being the principal plant used at the Christmas season. Of course, the size and price of hamper and plants vary with the needs of the different stores, but the stock used in the average establishment is well illustrated on this page. Each of these hampers was filled with poinsettias, cyclamens, ferns, Christmas peppers and dracænas, the poinsettia being the predominating feature. In most cases red ribbon also was added if the customer would pay the price. Of course these hampers are made with a metal lining and they make a quite enduring article. The price may vary widely, but an arrangement made to sell at $5 has proved to go out readily when shown in attractive style in stores where a fair class of trade is handled.

One of the advantages of these hampers is that they can be made up in advance. It is not necessary, with the metal pan, to wait until the last moment before delivery. In some stores the entire stock is made up a couple of days before Christmas, permitting all hands to turn in for selling during the rush, but in other stores sales are made from samples, while the men who do the making up are kept steadily on the job, each article being set away as sold, and a fresh one brought out to take its place. To handle the trade in this way requires a larger force, but it gives the customer the satisfaction of receiving the actual article selected, and not one somewhat similar.

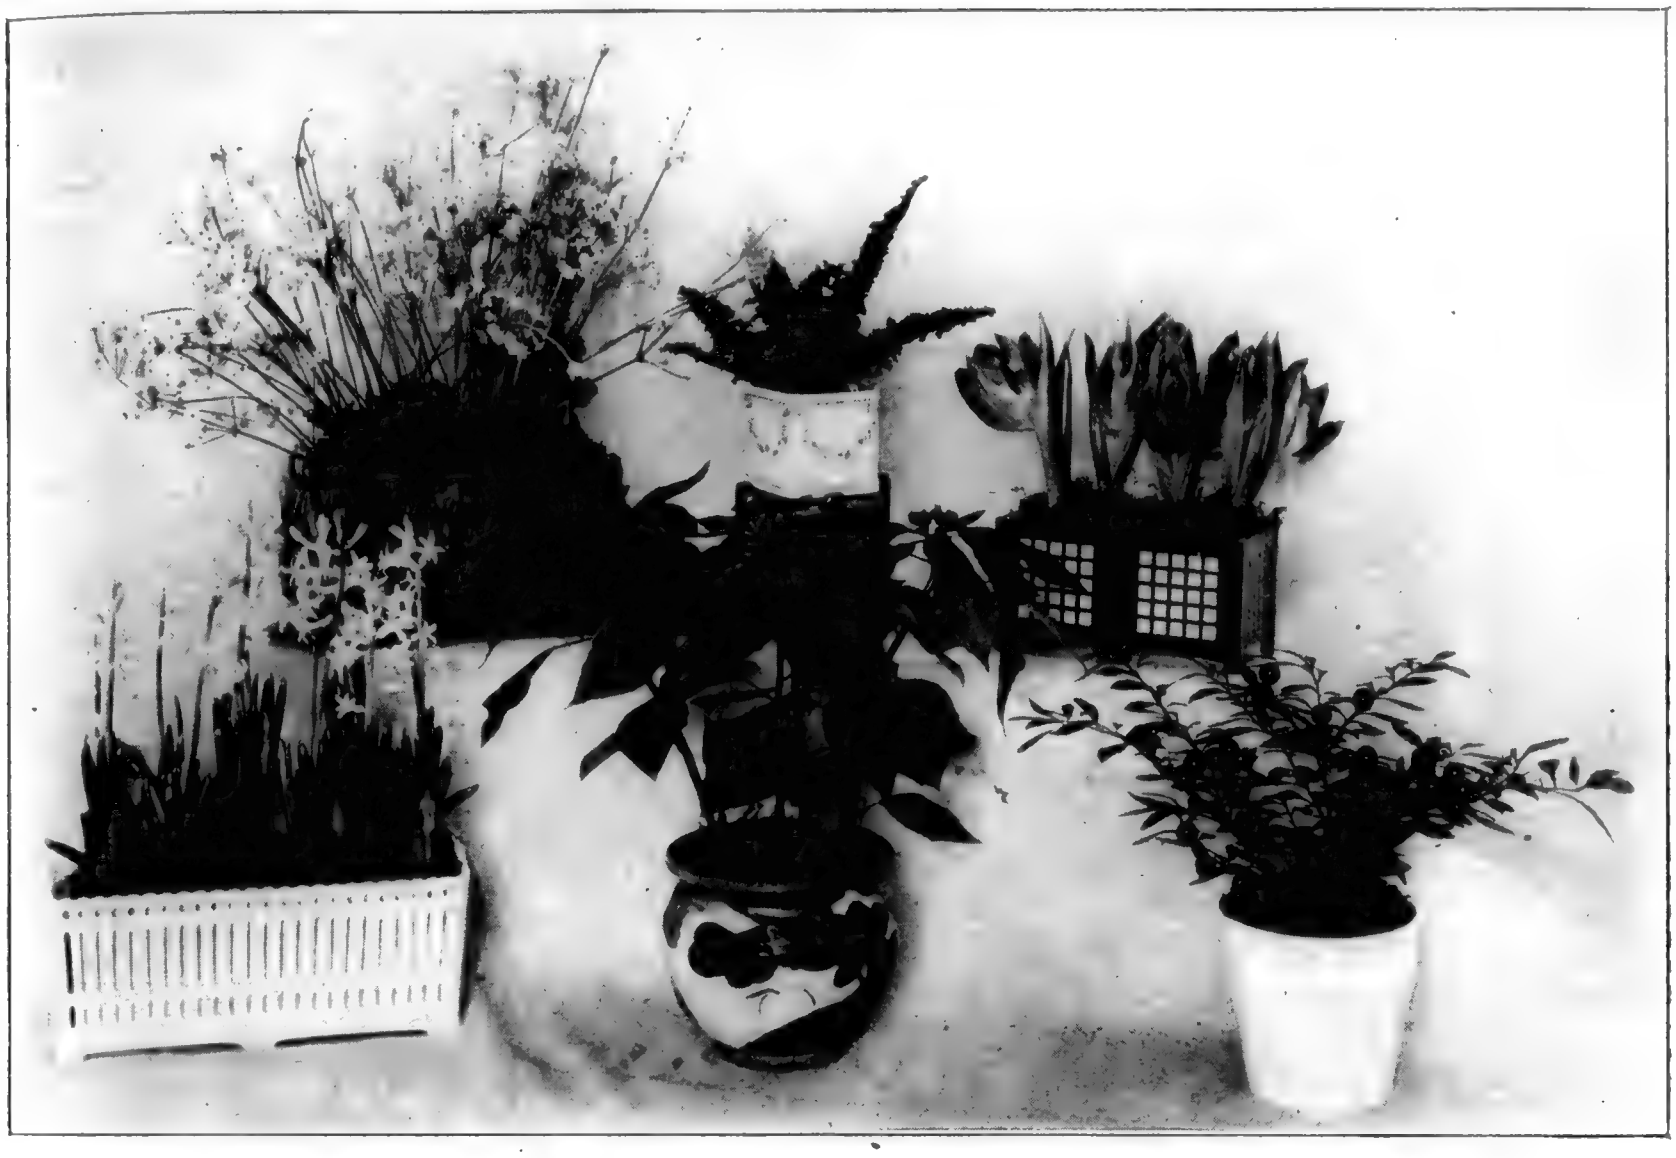
HOLIDAY CUT FLOWERS.

In the last few years we have heard a great deal about the sale of plants at the holidays, and after each one of these festivals we are told that it was a "plant Christmas," or a "plant Easter." But the fact remains that cut flowers still constitute the best selling part of the stock. Not only do customers enjoy sending boxes of flowers to their friends, but they buy cut flowers for their own holiday uses. Many a free spender who wants to remember his friends for Christmas sends each a box containing a dozen Beauties. Many a metropolitan florist has a number of such customers; men who simply hand out the addresses of those to whom the gifts are to be sent, and after having left quite an order such a customer almost invariably calls up later to add a few names at first overlooked.

A good many retail florists have pushed the plant end of the business at Christmas simply because cut flowers have been high and the opportunity for profit, even at the high retail prices, less than the opportunity to make money on the plants. Another thing which has been in favor of the plants was that the stock is less perishable; orders can be put up in advance and delivered the day before Christmas, while with cut flowers it usually is a case of putting up orders in the early hours of Christmas morning and making immediate delivery.

The changing times rather remove the objection of inadequate supply of cut flowers. Of recent years there have been enough, or nearly enough, and with the great increase in glass the chances of any extreme shortage are reduced to the minimum. In these modern times there seldom is a holiday when stock is not to be had in the big wholesale markets. Furthermore, prices are not so high as they once were. Perhaps one pays as much for a rose, but he gets a much better rose, and the same is true of practically all other cut stock. A good many florists who once put most of their energy into pushing plant arrangements are now turning once more to cut blooms. This is especially true of those high class stores which want to do just a little differently from what is done by their less pretentious competitors.

MODERATE PRICED NOVELTIES.



More and more each year the holiday business makes a call for novelties. The time was when the trade was almost wholly on the staple articles. Nowadays the bulk of the holiday trade is done with something out of the ordinary. Where retail florists have equipped themselves with holiday stock different from that offered their customers week after week the year around, they have found the Christmas sales jumped in a most satisfactory manner. The Christmas shopper is not looking for every-day articles; what is wanted for gift purposes is something out of the ordinary.

The Christmas novelties need not be expensive; indeed, in the great majority of flower stores there is no sale for the high-priced affairs, and in even the best of stores the bulk of the sales will be articles of moderate value.

While it is not the easiest thing to pick up cut flower or plant novelties, with the aid of the supply houses nothing is easier than to diversify the stock through the use of plant receptacles. These may be of any material, from the ordinary red pot, with its crepe paper cover, to an imported decorated china art novelty that has a value many times greater than that of the plant it contains. Any florist can supply himself with a stock in variety by taking poinsettias, Christmas cherries, tulips, hyacinths, primulas, cyclamens, and ferns of various kinds and planting them in these different receptacles. These novelties can be made up to sell anywhere from 50 cents to $5 or more, depending largely on the price of the receptacle and the tone of the store that is making the sale; a fashionable store in a big city cannot sell 50-cent articles at holiday time, rents and the cost of delivery necessitating sales that give greater profit.

The illustration on this page gives an idea of the variety of receptacles and planting used in a Chicago store last Christmas.

The forehanded florist keeps an eye out for pleasing novelties and buys them a few at a time as he finds them, but any who have neglected to prepare themselves for Christmas can stock up by wire. One of the developments of the supply business of recent years has been the sale of what the supply people call assortments, by which they mean that if the buyer gives an idea of what he wants, mentioning either price, size or style as well as purpose of the article, the supply man will pick out and ship a selection, one or two pieces of each style. So well do the supply people know the tastes and needs of the various communities that these assortments seldom fail to give complete satisfaction and many stores in small towns buy all their supply stock in that way.

CHRISTMAS GREENS.

Necessity for Preparedness.

A feature of the Christmas trade is the green business. It has grown till it takes up a great deal of time and we must either make up these wreaths and garlands ourselves or buy them. Some can be bought to advantage, while others are difficult to get in the right quality. Having these wreaths and wreathing in sufficient quantity, ready in advance of the demand, and kept so that they will be in good order for Christmas eve, will require no little thought and management. If you make up your own greens you cannot put it off till the last day, when everybody is on the jump with other work, but must make them up several days before sale.

Care of Holly.

Holly is, perhaps, our most important article in this line. It should never be exposed to severe weather. The cases should be stored in a cool shed. A dry heat will shrivel it up. A cool, rather moist cellar would be the ideal place. Use the short stuff for making wreaths and the good branches and sprays for selling as 50 cents' worth, or a dollar's worth, or two dollars' worth, for there is a great demand for nice stock that way.

If you do not have this cool cellar for storing the loose branches, and more particularly the wreaths when they are made up, perhaps a week ahead of time, they keep well beneath a bench in a cool greenhouse, laying coarse paper on the ground, to keep the wreaths clean, and newspaper over them, to keep the light away. Do not put down more than two layers of the wreaths, or the weight will flatten out the lower ones. Some make these holly wreaths with ground pine on one side and holly on the other. And some work in the so-called red berries to help out when the holly is shy of its own berries. Get your local wire worker to supply you with the wire frames for the wreaths; he will supply them as cheap and neater than you can make them.

Laurel Wreathing.

The so-called mountain laurel, Kalmia latifolia, is by all odds the nicest material for wreathing. It is a pretty green, clean, does not drop and has not the cheap look of the ground pine wreathing. Use it in all decorations where you can. It is perhaps double the cost of the ground pine wreathing, but it looks it and is worth it. Here is an article, though, that you can buy by the yard, made up, rather cheaper than you can buy the sprays and make it up yourself. The best trade may call for some laurel wreathing "extra heavy," and this we have to make up for the occasion.

This beautful shrub adorns the bleak and snowy slopes of our Allegheny mountains and no amount of frost hurts it. A coldframe, with the light excluded, is a good place for it, but don't make too great a thickness of it, for it flattens out and then is anything but ornamental. That is the only trouble with the wreathing you buy; it needs to be ruffled up and shaken out.

Bouquet Green.

The old ground pine, which has several aliases, will come next in importance. We all know that it is a carpet to some parts of our northern states and is as hardy as an icicle, but it browns up quickly when used in a warm room. Even while in crates, unpacked, some cloth or covering should be thrown over it to keep the exposed outsides from losing the fresh green color. To dip the bunches in water for a minute or two will make the sprays pliable and easier to work, but if overwet it will all the quicker turn brown or black after being made up.

The wreathing that is made up by tens of thousands of yards and sold to the florists for them to retail is apt to be thin, because competition has brought the price down too low for the manufacturers to turn out a really good article; you can't get something for nothing at Christmas any more than at any other time. Consequently many florists prefer to make their own wreathing and then store it away in a frame or cool shed, but always covered, so that the light and air will be excluded as much as possible.

Magnolia and Smilax.

The above three materials are the principal things for our holiday decorations. There are other things used in a small way. The beautiful leaves of the Magnolia grandiflora are ornamental on small branches, but not often seen.

There is nothing to say about that most decorative of all hardy climbers, the southern smilax. It is in season from October until April and you buy it by the case when you want it. The merest novice can tack this up and it can not be otherwise than graceful. It is something like Asparagus plumosus in this respect, only the smilax is invaluable in the large hall, while the plumosus is at home in the drawing-room.

Bouquet green is scarce and high this year, and much wild smilax will be used instead for decorations.

Mistletoe.

Don't forget a few dollars' worth of imported mistletoe. Some people say there are no "privileges" allowed with the native species and will have nothing but the imported article, but the majority do not know the difference. It is not of record that the mistletoe, which has such charming associations, lends extra bliss to the exercise under the bough when well berried, but certain it is that it often reaches the florist quite berryless. The berries are in the bottom of the case. If you buy ten dollars' worth of mistletoe you will, perhaps, only get your money back, but you won't do that if you leave it in the case and let every boy you have maul it over when wanting to select a 50-cent or dollar spray. Unpack and sort it and put a price on each group, so that you can readily pick up what your customer wants.

Christmas Trees.

The Christmas tree, in large cities, at least, is no worry to the florist. Carloads come in and are handled by the market people, but those florists who make the effort can sell trees with their other greens. The florist ought to make an effort to have a little better grade of greens than can be bought of the provision stores or street salesmen with whom he comes in competition, and the same way with trees. A lot of people know a good, shapely tree when they see it. You can sell a lot of these by telephone or by letter, if you have the stock and facilities.

Table trees are new in many localities. These are little fellows, not over two feet high, and should be offered with some sort of base to hold them upright. A piece of tree four to six inches in diameter, sawed into disks an inch or two thick, makes a good support; bore a hole in the center of the disk, sharpen the end of the little Christmas tree, drive it in the hole, and there you are, all ready for the table and trimming.

THE POPULAR POINSETTIA.

Among the Christmas specialties nothing sells better than the basket of poinsettias. Illustrated on this page are two such arrangements. These were raffia baskets, one round and one square, but almost any kind of basket does well with the poinsettia and the red ribbon bow. For making up in this way one should choose poinsettias of a height to correspond with the height of his basket; a low handle calls for low plants, a higher handle permits the use of taller stock. A few ferns mixed with the poinsettias serve to fill in the bare spots. One touch that costs little, but is generally omitted, is to cover the soil with green sphagnum moss.

THE SIMPLE LIFE.

The fussy kind of plant arrangement does not appeal to all tastes; some plant buyers, whether or not they lead the simple life themselves, prefer the simple object—nature unadorned. For such as these there is nothing more attractive than the cyclamen as shown in the illustration on page 28. This was in one of the pure white china pots now handled by all the supply houses, perfectly plain, except for the beading just beneath the rim and the garland of raised flowers which shows at one side. Any good cyclamen plant will sell in such a pot and such a sale will almost invariably make a friend for the florist.

THE LOVELY LORRAINE.

Nowadays no retail store that caters to discriminating trade can get along without the Lorraine begonia at Christmas. The Lorraine is not the most enduring of plants; neither is it the easiest plant to handle when making a large number of rush deliveries in bad weather, but flower buyers simply will not do without it. Some of the leading retailers still will not do better by Lorraine than to say it will last at least as long as cut flowers, but others find they have few complaints and give the plant hearty approval. And all the while the demand increases for this most beautiful of Christmas flowering plants.

The illustration on page 27 shows two plants of Lorraine, with some ferns, in a French fish basket. The basket was the genuine article, stained a dark green, and was lined with moss to retain the soil and moisture. It proved a first-class seller last Christmas and there are innumerable ways in which Lorraine can be worked into Christmas plant arrangements. There never is anything higher class than the baskets and hampers in which this plant is used.

DISPLAY PIECES.

It always pays to have in the Christmas stock one or two arrangements of just a little better character than the trade ordinarily calls for. While the bulk of the business is on low-priced or medium-priced arrangements, it always is possible to lead the trade upward if one makes a little effort.

On this page there is an illustration of a large Christmas hamper, in which poinsettias and Farleyense fern were the principal plants. These two make a delightful combination, in either a red or green basket, and a display piece of this character, in window or store, will lead to a better average class of sales than would be made without it. Did you ever take note of the fact that the average customer buys neither the most expensive nor the cheapest article you show? Apply a little psychology to your selling plans.

CARE OF CUT POINSETTIAS.

Will you kindly tell me how to take care of cut poinsettias? I have some nice plants growing in the bench for cut blooms, but as soon as I cut them and put them in water they wilt. I have cut them with stems from two to six feet long, but they will not draw up the water, even if they are put in water eighteen inches deep when they have a 5-foot stem. S. N. M.

Poinsettias grown in pots or pans have harder stems than those planted out and appear to hold up better when cut. It is necessary, however, to stop the bleeding as speedily as possible after the stems are cut. Several plans have been successfully tried to effect this: Searing the cuts with a hot iron, dipping for a few seconds in boiling water, or standing in water heated to a temperature of 125 to 150 degrees for a few minutes. The last-mentioned plan, tried this season, works splendidly. Place them in cold water in a cool room afterward and there will be no signs of wilting.

C.

OPPOSING THE FAKER.

The florists of western Pennsylvania are up in arms in opposition to the invasion of their territory by the so-called fakers. In the last year or two the cheap salesmen from the big cities have found an opportunity to branch out in the smaller towns. In many cases they maintain buying representatives in the big markets, who pick up any stock which can be had at low figures and ship it to the out-of-town sellers, some of whom operate street stands, while others maintain quite pretentious stores. Conditions in many wholesale markets have favored the operations of these people, until they have become a large factor in the trade.

The local florists of Reading, Pa., which city recently has been invaded by the cheap salesmen, have formed an association for the purpose of dealing with the situation. They are seeking to enlist the support of the leading florists in all other small cities in the state, for the purpose of withdrawing patronage from those who have been supplying the cheap sellers.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS

Poinsettias.

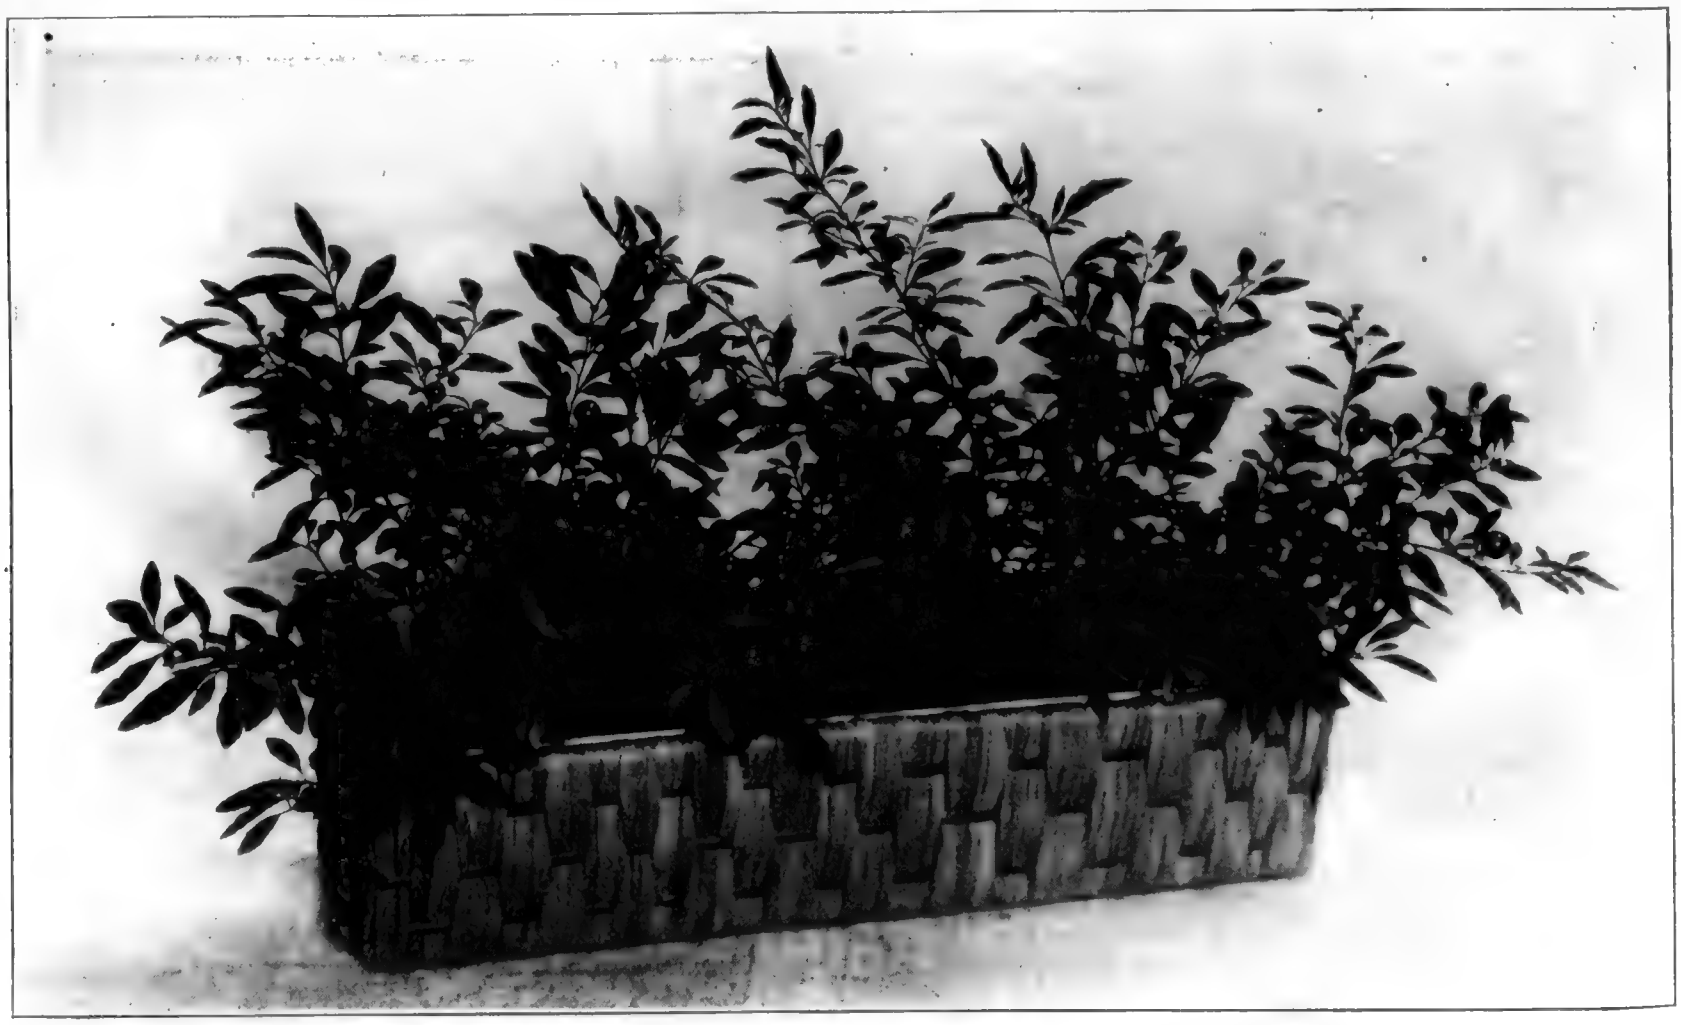
The bracts on the poinsettias are now well developed and a slight lowering of the temperature will be a benefit. Particularly is this the case with those growing in pans, a large proportion of which will be called upon to do service in the stores, where they must withstand variable climatic conditions, and if they have not been grown too warm during the last stages of growth they will be less likely to go to pieces when exposed to rather low temperatures. The query, "How can I prevent leaves from turning yellow on my poinsettias?" is easier asked than answered. There are many causes of yellowing foliage; the principal causes are wide temperature fluctuations and too dry or moist root conditions. An overdose of liquid or chemical food will also speedily cause leaves to drop.

A common query also is, "How shall I treat cut poinsettias to make them last?" If cut and placed at once in cold water, they do not keep well, but if, as soon as they are cut, the bottoms of the stems, bleeding profusely, are plunged in jars of water of a temperature of 130 to 150 degrees, left there about five minutes and then placed in cold water in a cool room, they will hold the leaves intact for a number of days and not wilt at all. Searing the ends of the stems is sometimes effectual, also plunging in boiling water for a few seconds, but our experience has been that water at 130 to 150 degrees and then cold storage in plenty of water is the best method for keeping both leaves and bracts fresh and firm.

Primulas.

Thanks to the unusually warm fall, November being a record breaker for mildness, primulas are much better in flower than is usual at this season. Nicely bloomed pots of primroses are never allowed to go begging long at either stores or greenhouses, and plants which have been frequently spaced to prevent the leaves crowding, and which have a light position in a moderately warm, sunny house, should now be in good shape. Scarlet varieties, like Cheswick Red or Crimson King, are the best Christmas sellers, but there is always some call for other colors. P. obconica makes a useful plant at the holidays. The chief objection to its extended use is the fact that the leaves poison many people and this has given the plant a "black eye" with quite a number. P. Sinensis does not like liquid stimulants as strong as allotted for other sorts.

Freesias.



It makes considerable difference in the returns from the early batch of freesias, whether they are in flower for Christmas week or not. The quantity annually flowered at this early season is comparatively small, but the high prices prevailing at that time are a temptation for some to endeavor to bloom them. Spikes must now be well advanced, with an occasional flower opening, to insure their being on time. Do not let the temperature exceed 55 degrees at night at any time; hard forcing completely spoils them. Keep the latest batches cool and water abundantly at all times while growing.

Lilies.

It is getting too late now to pot longiflorums and have them in flower for Easter, as some would-be growers imagine. They will come along nicely for Memorial day, when all good flowers sell. Move the Christmas lilies into cooler quarters as they expand and let laggards have a hot, moist house with frequent syringings. Easter longiflorums should now be showing through the soil, or they will be too late. Do not try to force them too hard until the pots are well filled with roots. Formosas will not require any forcing; a temperature of 50 to 55 degrees at night from now on will be ample for them. Harrisii, where they are being grown—and, owing to the early date of Easter in 1910, more than usual are being tried—will require a moderately cool house and may require a little retarding later. Remember that you should be able to see and count your lily buds before Lent comes in.

Lorraine Begonias.

Christmas is the great season for selling Lorraine begonias. It almost seems as though more and more are grown and sold each year, and, in spite of occasional periods of glut in the plant market, they hold a leading position still. Complaints are often made of their shedding their flowers in a couple of days when placed in a warm room, but where they have been gradually hardened off the plants will bloom profusely all winter. Avoid anything in the nature of heavy fumigating, or poinsettia foliage and begonia flowers will alike bear mute testimony to its baneful effects.

Dicentra Spectabilis.

The roots of Dicentra spectabilis, better remembered, perhaps, as dielytra, are now to hand. After potting, they should be placed in a coldframe, with the pots protected, for a few weeks. When housed for forcing, they should not have a strong temperature; 50 to 55 degrees at night is better than 10 degrees higher. Let the flowers, as they start to develop, have a cool house, as they will then have far more substance. Pots eight inches in diameter will be required for average sized pieces of dielytra.

Stevia.

The useful little winter flower, stevia, is now coming into season. To keep up a steady succession, a batch of pots or boxes should be placed in moderate warmth each week. Customers buying carnations and roses frequently want a few pieces of stevia put in for good measure, in the same way as many want Asparagus Sprengeri each time they buy a dozen carnations. This opens up the question as to how far the "throwing in" system is one to recommend. Of course, visitors at showy establishments would be righteously indignant if asked to pay for either stevia or Sprengeri, but we are of the opinion that the giving away of flowers should form no part of the florists' business, except in special cases.

Christmas Plants.

Clean pots and neatly painted tubs should be the rule at Christmas. Bays, boxes, hollies, aucubas, thuyas, retinosporas and other evergreens look vastly better if the tubs containing them get a new coat of paint. It is pleasing to note the immense development of the Christmas plant trade and to note how much care is now taken to have them spick and span before sending them out. Some Christmases wrapping can practically be dispensed with, but we can never depend on this, so a liberal supply of wrapping paper should be kept on hand in case of emergency.

Show Pelargoniums.

Show pelargoniums are now starting to grow freely and will soon require considerable additional bench space. They like a cool, airy house; 40 to 45 degrees at night will suffice and prove much better for them than 50 degrees. A spraying overhead with nicotine once a week will keep them clean, and fumigation will answer well where this is not done. On no account allow green aphis to get a secure foothold, or the plants will be half ruined.

ABSORPTIVE POWER OF PLANTS.

An idea occurred to me lately on the power of certain plants to absorb odors. I believe in having plenty of celery for house use all winter and I give you my plan of keeping it. I aim to get a nice growth on it and handle it by pulling off suckers and useless leaves. Towards fall I tie it up nicely, not too tight, and on the approach of cold weather I clear a space under a greenhouse stage, preferably a center stage. Then I give the ground a good soaking of water, lift the celery with a ball of earth and set close together. It is better if no heating pipes are near them. So lifted, without blanching, they continue to grow and even the green stems become mild and palatable after being in the greenhouse a while.

Now I come back to my odors. This is supposed to be a cold house, suitable for violets, or any cold-house stock. I believe in keeping cold out of a house rather than to drive it out by fire heat, so I made some light shelters and covered them with tar paper. I only had a few new ones made, but after a day or two I found that the celery had absorbed the odor of the tar paper.

This called to mind another incident. Over fifty years ago I worked under a celebrated plant grower on the old Wilmore place, near Birmingham, England, and he used at times to stage such plants as gloxinias, achimines, cinerarias, begonias, and even orchids, over a shallow tank containing manure water, over hot water pipes, and his success was something remarkable with some subjects. Of course, cool treatment was required in the after handling, but it seems to me there was something in it for thought among practical men. F. A. Baller.

BLEEDING OF POINSETTIAS.

What is the best way to keep poinsettias from bleeding or from wilting after cutting them? G. M. N. & S.

Poinsettias bleed profusely when cut, and placing them in cold water right away does not help them. As soon as you cut your stems, have a can or tub of warm water of a temperature of 125 to 150 degrees and stand the stems in it for five minutes. Place them in this water at once and do not leave them lying around until finishing your cut. The hot water stops the bleeding, and by standing them in cold water later they will hold up well for you. The leaves on cut poinsettias always fade before the flowers. The bracts are generally good when the foliage has all fallen. The hot water plan materially lengthens the duration of the foliage. C.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

THE CHRISTMAS TABLES.

The Christmas table decorations will call for the use of red and green in the shades of the poinsettia and holly.

The accompanying illustration is reproduced from a photograph showing a Christmas decoration by the Bell Floral Co., Franklin, Pa. This was in the dining-room of the Venango Club at Oil City and was all in poinsettias and Christmas bells. The large dome light over the table was transformed into a large bell, using red beech sprays, small Christmas bells and poinsettias. In the center of the table there lay a large ball of boxwood and red immortelles, with wide holly-red ribbon radiating from it, each ribbon having a large double bow at the edge of the table. Midway between the center and each end of the oval table there was a basket of poinsettias. The green used was smilax.

Such a decoration as this is susceptible to modification to fit almost any condition and it affords a striking and pleasing variation from the classes of material used in this work at other seasons.

VAPOR ON SHOW WINDOWS.

In our flower store we use a gas stove for heating in the rear. How can we prevent the window from getting covered with moisture, without heating the front of the store? Is there something with which we coula rub or wash the window, in order to prevent this? G. M. N. & S.

The steaming of the windows in any store is due to the watery vapors in the atmosphere becoming condensed. This condensation is brought about by the vapors coming in contact with the window glass, which is colder than the interior of the room. In a flower store the air is unusually damp; therefore we all experience much trouble with frost on our windows, especially during the coldest days, just when a pretty window, with its flowers and plants, would appeal strongly to the passer-by. Layer after layer of this moisture freezes on the window, and it is soon coated with ice, especially at the bottom, the moisture running down the glass.

A little heat in the front of the store would do no good. You would have to get the air quite warm before the frost on the glass would thaw.

One way of preventing the steaming is by causing a passage of air on the inside of the window, close to the glass. This may be accomplished with small ventilators at the top of the window or just below the glass, in the frame, if there is one.

A solution of two-thirds alcohol and one-third glycerine, applied lightly to the glass with a sponge or cloth, will prevent the freezing of the moisture, but I have found this a nuisance also, as the window is not clear when coated in this manner.

After much experience, I have found the best remedy to be cold water applied freely to the glass. Take a small watering can or a sprayer and flow some cold water down the inside of the window. Doing this once or twice a day, usually toward evening, will be sufficient. If your window is so constructed that water cannot be applied freely, then I would suggest that you wipe off the steam with a sponge or cloth saturated with cold water.

It has been suggested that the only sure remedy for the trouble we experience in winter with frost on the glass, is to have the window constructed the same as a florist's refrigerator door; that is, two lights of glass with an air space between. This I hardly think practical with a large window. In the first place, the space between must be perfectly air-tight, and even then, in time, the glass inside will get dirty and will have to be cleaned. Still, never having had any experience with a window so constructed, I do not want to condemn this method entirely. H. S.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

A Letter From President Valentine.

As the year is fast drawing to a close, I hope you will not feel it an infliction if I address a few words to you before stepping down and out.

The most noteworthy work accomplished by our society during the year was the securing of a revision of the tariff in relation to bulbs. The duty is now based upon the number and not the value of the bulbs. This is simple, tends to the importation of a better average grade and does away with the accusations of sharp practices by removing the inducement and the opportunity. Under the old arrangement the honest importer was handicapped, but now he starts from the scratch.

This alone is much, but it is significant of more. It means that this society has been able to secure attention in the halls of Congress and, still more, to have it apparent that the weight of its influence is cast on the side of honest and upright methods.

Now that the society has accomplished so much in this direction, let us make it a continuing habit to do things that need doing.

Cyclamen in a White China Pot.

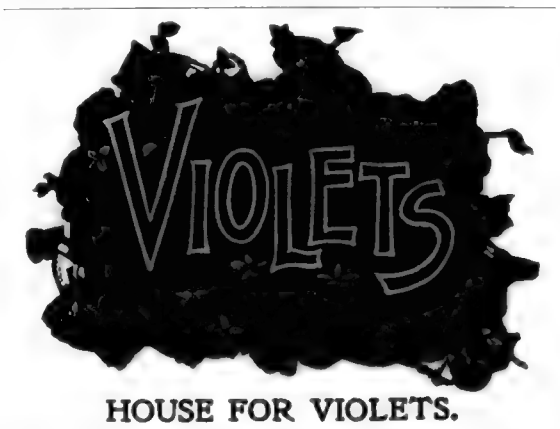
A Christmas Dinner Decoration of Poinsettias and Red Bells.

What about those florists who are not members? When they realize that efforts are constantly being made to secure results that will benefit them, there are few of them that will not contribute their portion of the expense. Each present member should start the new year right by getting a new member.

Tell your friends that the next president was one of the men who spent their own money and went to Washington and produced results. It is safe to predict that still greater results will be the outgrowth of his administration.

The retailers are going to be with us at the next convention. They are already knocking at the door by scores, for we are showing them that there is something inside that is worth coming after. The committee in charge of that movement is actively at work.

My personal thanks are due to every vice-president who has done his duty, and nearly all of them have. Some few of them seem to have overlooked the fact that when they accept an appointment they thereby incur an obligation to work for the society that honors them.



To the members of the different committees I acknowledge a debt of gratitude for the hard work they have done and the results secured.

To Mr. Rudd, the efficient secretary, is largely due the credit for the advance the society has made during the past year. His years of experience with the society have made his counsel invaluable and I have frequently profited by his advice.

The society is larger and richer than ever before. Let us work together the coming year and see if we can not greet President Pierson with a membership of 2,000 at Rochester, instead of 1,000, as at Cincinnati.

Reports indicate an unusually prosperous condition in all parts of the country, and the outlook for the immediate future is encouraging, but history should teach us that booms are followed by depressions. Let us, therefore, use present profits in a conservative manner, so that, if hard times should come in two or three years, we shall have money in the bank instead of ranges of new glass that are not yet paid for.

With cordial Christmas greeting for every one of you, I am enthusiastically yours. J. A. VALENTINE, President.

HOUSE FOR VIOLETS.

I have a small house in which I want to try growing violets, but do not know whether it is the place for them or not, as it is somewhat shaded in the morning by two large houses and in the afternoon by the dwelling house. I have never grown any violets, but have been reading about growing them in coldframes and dugouts, so I thought that this would be a much better place.

J. E. S.

Of course, a house where there would be no shade would be better adapted for violet culture. They require all the sun and light possible in winter. Roses and carnations would not do at all in such a house, but there is no reason why you cannot grow violets in it with a fair amount of success. Your pick during midwinter will be materially reduced on account of the shade, but it will have an advantage over stock in coldframes, which can only be depended upon for a small fall and heavy spring picking. Maintain an average night temperature of 40 degrees and give abundance of fresh air. Princess of Wales, single, and Lady Hume Campbell, double, are two reliable varieties. W. C.

SPIRAEAS FOR EASTER.

How should I treat spiræas so as to have them in bloom for Easter? What temperature do they require and when should they be started for the Easter trade? G. H. P.

Keep the clumps cold and exposed to frost after being received. They can be potted any time after the middle of December and should be held in a coldframe or pit. Easter Sunday comes March 27 next year. By starting your plants in a night temperature of 60 degrees on or about January 20, they will be in season. The old variety, S. Japonica, will come into bloom a few days earlier than such varieties as grandiflora, Gladstone and astilboides. Pink kinds, such as Peach Blossom and Queen Alexandra, should be allowed twelve weeks. They are not as good early forcers as the white varieties, however. Spiræas will stand hard forcing and can be flowered

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

THE CHRISTMAS TABLES.

The Christmas table decorations will call for the use of red and green in the shades of the poinsettia and holly.

The accompanying illustration is reproduced from a photograph showing a Christmas decoration by the Bell Floral Co., Franklin, Pa. This was in the dining-room of the Venango Club at Oil City and was all in poinsettias and Christmas bells. The large dome light over the table was transformed into a large bell, using red beech sprays, small Christmas bells and poinsettias. In the center of the table there lay a large ball of boxwood and red immortelles, with wide holly-red ribbon radiating from it, each ribbon having a large double bow at the edge of the table. Midway between the center and each end of the oval table there was a basket of poinsettias. The green used was smilax.

Such a decoration as this is susceptible to modification to fit almost any condition and it affords a striking and pleasing variation from the classes of material used in this work at other seasons.

VAPOR ON SHOW WINDOWS.

In our flower store we use a gas stove for heating in the rear. How can we prevent the window from getting covered with moisture, without heating the front of the store? Is there something with which we could rub or wash the window, in order to prevent this? G. M. N. & S.

The steaming of the windows in any store is due to the watery vapors in the atmosphere becoming condensed. This condensation is brought about by the vapors coming in contact with the window glass, which is colder than the interior of the room. In a flower store the air is unusually damp; therefore we all experience much trouble with frost on our windows, especially during the coldest days, just when a pretty window, with its flowers and plants, would appeal strongly to the passer-by. Layer after layer of this moisture freezes on the window, and it is soon coated with ice, especially at the bottom, the moisture running down the glass.

A little heat in the front of the store would do no good. You would have to get the air quite warm before the frost on the glass would thaw.

One way of preventing the steaming is by causing a passage of air on the inside of the window, close to the glass. This may be accomplished with small ventilators at the top of the window or just below the glass, in the frame, if there is one.

A solution of two-thirds alcohol and one-third glycerine, applied lightly to the glass with a sponge or cloth, will prevent the freezing of the moisture, but I have found this a nuisance also, as the window is not clear when coated in this manner.

After much experience, I have found the best remedy to be cold water applied freely to the glass. Take a small watering can or a sprayer and flow some cold water down the inside of the window. Doing this once or twice a day, usually toward evening, will be sufficient. If your window is so constructed that water cannot be applied freely, then I would suggest that you wipe off the steam with a sponge or cloth saturated with cold water.

It has been suggested that the only sure remedy for the trouble we experience in winter with frost on the glass, is to have the window constructed the same as a florist's refrigerator door; that is, two lights of glass with an air space between. This I hardly think practical with a large window. In the first place, the space between must be perfectly air-tight, and even then, in time, the glass inside will get dirty and will have to be cleaned. Still, never having had any experience with a window so constructed, I do not want to condemn this method entirely. H. S.

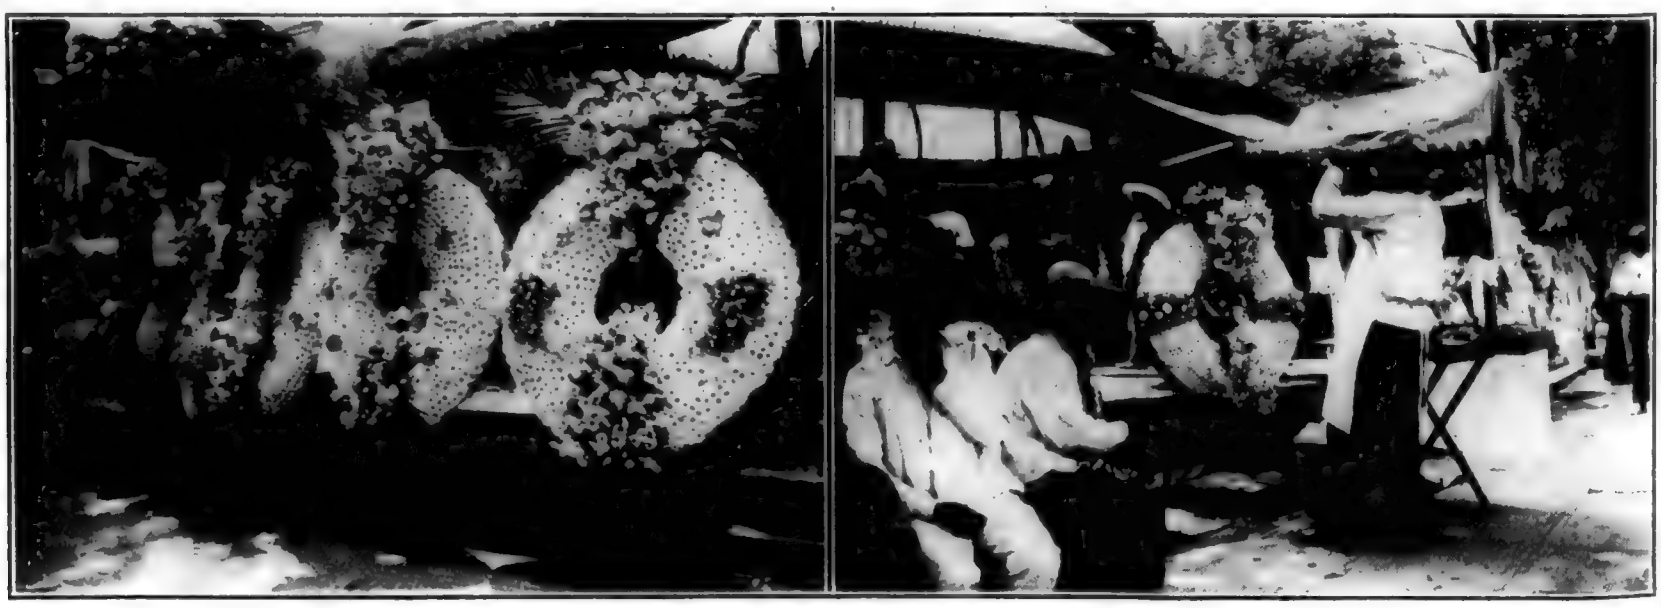
CITY OF MEXICO MARKET.

Flowers Not Sold in Stores.

To those accustomed to the way in which cut flowers are used and sold in the United States, the flower market in the City of Mexico is full of novelty and interest. In the metropolis of the Mexican republic there are no flower stores—they are plant stores only—the flowers being all sold at the market house in a public square. One unfamiliar with the fact, considering Mexico as a hot country, would suppose that it would be necessary to take great pains to store the cut flowers in a cool place to prevent their withering quickly, but instead the market place has merely a glass roof and no means whatever are employed to protect the stock; it stands in the open, exposed to sun and wind.

In the City of Mexico the florist is not a decorator, nor does he sell loose cut flowers; practically the whole of the business is with designs, that are carried in stock, ready made up, displayed for the choice of the transient customer and ready to be carried away as soon as the inevitable bargaining is concluded. In northern cities designs are made up only to order, but in this Mexico City market dozens of them line the pavement; and not cheap designs, either, but pieces that would be worth good money in any town above the Rio Grande.

Florists' Visit Interesting.



Miss Matilda Meinhardt, of St. Louis, had just returned from a trip to Mexico with a party when she was chosen as president of the Ladies' Society of American Florists at the Cincinnati convention. To Mexico with Miss Meinhardt went Miss Margaret Vesey, of Fort Wayne, daughter of Judge and Mrs. W. J. Vesey, and herself one of the vice-presidents of the Ladies' S. A. F. As with other florists who visit the Diaz capital, Miss Meinhardt and Miss Vesey found the flower market one of the centers of greatest interest. Miss Vesey is an expert amateur photographer and took a number of pictures of this unique place, several of which are reproduced in this issue of the Review.

"The flower market in Mexico City," writes Miss Vesey, "is in the center of the business district, easy of access and passed by large numbers of people, native and tourist. The market building is a large, circular one, having a canopy-like glass roof and no awning. The few trees do little to lessen the intensity of the sun's rays. The flowers brought to the market all are grown in the gardens on the outskirts of the city. The various sellers are close to one another and to the uninitiated it is impossible to distinguish between them; one cannot tell where one man's stock in trade ends and another's begins. The methods of doing business are full of interest to one accustomed to the trade as it is conducted with such great similarity in all the cities of the United States.

How the Pieces Are Made.

"Practically no loose cut flowers are sold by the dealers in the flower market in the City of Mexico; some, of course, and a few in bunches, but most of them in designs. Some of these designs are brought to the market already made up, but the greater part are made in the market itself while the flower venders are waiting for customers; the making up of designs is going on practically all of the time.

"No wire frames are used by the Mexicans. The frames they use are made from twigs, tied together with grass or strings. To those accustomed to the use of the neat, rigid wire frame, these twig affairs seem crude and bungling, but the workmen are extremely dexterous in fashioning the frames and in making up the designs on them. The frames are filled with anything that happens to be handy, old flowers, leaves, and so on. When the filling is in place everything is covered nicely with green leaves, sometimes one thing, sometimes another. The flowers then are put in, setting them closely and evenly, using as many as possible—none of the effort to make stock go as far as it will, the way northern florists have to do when white carnations cost 4 cents and are hard to find at that.

Scenes in the Flower Market in the City of Mexico.

A Nearer View of the Flower Market in the City of Mexico.

Materials and Prices.

"The City of Mexico is by no means flowerless; there is a surprising variety of stock and much of it is of excellent quality. In July I saw the design-makers using American Beauties, roses, carnations, chrysanthemums, violets, pansies, sweet peas, marguerites, Shasta daisies and several varieties of lilies. The Beauties and Killarney were especially good.

"The designs are all topped beautifully and most of them are quite artistic. The wreath seems to be the favorite piece, being most frequently seen mounted on an easel.

"The Mexican market florists never expect to get the price first asked. I saw the sale of a design that the man first asked $15 for that finally went for $2.50. I priced a design, beautifully made, six feet high, a wreath on an easel, with an anchor worked in on each side of the center, the first price asked being $10. This was in Mexican currency, which, in our money, would be $5. It was a design that in any first-class American city could not be bought for less than $50.

Many Uses for Designs.

"These designs are used in the City of Mexico for all sorts of purposes. They not only use them for funerals, but on old graves as well as new. Just as northern people take flowers to the cemetery on Memorial day, the Mexicans take designs on saints' days, on anniversaries of all kinds. It is only for this reason that the market people can find a steady sale for their ready-made designs.

"The largest florists' store in the City of Mexico had only foliage plants and seeds for sale at the time of my visit. The plants were surprisingly expensive in comparison to the cheapness of the designs in the market. The average price of the plants in the store was $25. All the cut flowers used in the city are sold in the market and on a few small street stands."

SWEET PEAS NOT BLOOMING.

My sweet peas are six to eight feet high, but have produced few blooms. The soil consists of one part rotted cow manure to four parts soil. What should I feed to make them bloom? E. C.

Possibly you may not be growing the right winter blooming varieties. Such sorts as Earliest of All, Mont Blanc, Florence Denzer and Watchung ought to flower when half the height of your plants. Your soil is all right, and feeding ought not to be necessary if the soil is of good depth. I presume you are growing in solid beds; benches give shorter growth and somewhat earlier flowers in midwinter, but the quality is inferior. A night temperature of 48 to 50 degrees is about right. Feed with liquid cow manure when the plants really require it. A top-dressing of pulverized sheep manure is also good. A dressing of fine bone is also helpful, but should not be applied until later in the season. This can be hoed or lightly forked in.

C. W.

HOUSES FOR ROSES.

I have two houses, each 16x100, with no division between them. They are heated by hot water. Could roses be grown profitably in these, and if so, what would be the most profitable variety or varieties to grow? What is the best time of the year for planting them? I am located in Pennsylvania. E. C.

If you have no special experience in rose culture, we would advise against planting the houses to this flower. The growing of roses successfully has been merged more and more into the hands of large specialists, and flowers such as you could probably produce would not compare favorably with these in quality. Of course, if you have a good local trade and could use the flowers as produced, you might be able to make a little money, but even then, with good shipping facilities from the big centers, you could, I think, buy them cheaper than you could grow them. Killarney is the most generally popular rose; both the white and pink are persistent bloomers.

Your houses would grow carnations well and there would be more money in these for you than in roses, there being less liability of failure. Violets, bulbous stock, chrysanthemums and other stock could be grown successfully in the houses named and we think would earn you more money than the roses.

PITTSBURG THE MECCA

SMOKY CITY TO THE FORE.

Carnationists to Assemble There.

It will not be many weeks before the carnation growers will be wending their way to Pittsburg for the annual convention and exhibition. Naturally they will want to see what may be seen outside the exhibition hall itself and it is therefore especially timely to give a few words of description of the largest plant in the vicinity, that of the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co., at Bakerstown. The postoffice is Gibsonia, Pa. Up to a few weeks ago this was the Pittsburg Rose and Carnation Co. Fred Burki was president, also of the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co., which does a large wholesale business in Pittsburg, so it was decided to consolidate the two corporations in one, having a capital of $300,000.

Mr. Burki is a quiet and modest man, but a close observer, keen, sagacious, progressive, energetic, practical and a tireless worker. Everything he grows there is money in, and he won't touch anything he cannot see profit in. At the same time he tries almost everything new that appeals to him as being desirable and a money-maker, but be it old or new, the moment it ceases to be profitable, out it goes. He is president of the Pittsburg Florists' Club and vice-president of the American Carnation Society. Wishing to consult with him about some club matters, the other day found me at Bakerstown. As everything on the place was so systematically handled, and the crops in such excellent condition, I thought some of you would like to know how Mr. Burki does things; hence these notes. But bear in mind I am not writing this for the big florists who know so much already, and whose places are extensive; I am doing it for the little fellows who hunger for a knowledge of the successes of the bigger ones.

The Greenhouses.

It would be useless to describe each of the sixteen houses in detail. Suffice it to say that between six and seven acres are covered with glass. More than half of the houses are of the most modern and perfect iron-frame construction. Those of you from the prairie levels of Chicago, Richmond and Long Island, when you come to the convention next month, will here see something different from what you have at home, where greenhouse building is "as easy as rolling off a log." Here the glass is spread over high hills, exposed to wind and storm, and still it is a magnificent success. Most of the houses are on a south slope. The older ones are built on a ten per cent face grade, the newer ones on a sixteen per cent grade; the latter is much preferred, being lighter and sunnier. All of the newer ranges are individual houses, with twenty feet space between them. This prevents one house from shading the other and is a great convenience in teaming.

The glass used on the roofs is double A, put in the short way. The sides are seven feet high, three feet of this being wall and four feet glass. There is continuous ventilation back and front at the ridge, but on the older houses none at the sides. In the larger new houses panels open here and there back and front, opening from the top inward, so that the cold air will run up inside of the glass roof and not immediately over the plants. But these side ventilators are seldom used, except in warm summer weather. While the older houses have frame walls, the newer ones are of concrete made of coal ashes. These are everlasting and were made by their own labor, and they didn't cost any more than would well made board sides. There is a wide removable panel in the gable end of each house for convenience in emptying and filling soil.

In many of the houses the benches are wood, but as these are rotting out, they are being replaced with concrete side walls three to four inches thick, with beds eight inches deep, bottomed with 4-inch common drain tile set close together. Mr. Burki likes these benches. With them there is very little danger from overwatering, the plants thrive well on them, and they do not harbor fungous or insect pests.

The greenhouses are heated by steam furnished from two batteries of boilers set in the ravine between the hills. He uses the Murphy smokeless furnaces and is very well pleased with them. They are self-stoking, self-feeding and economical in fuel and labor; the combustion in them is extra good and they produce little smoke. For these he uses slack as fuel; for the hand-stoked furnaces he uses ¾-inch screened coal, and gets better results from the slack. About smoke, he declares that his best firemen always make the most smoke. This is contrary to the theories urged by our city smoke-consumer cranks, who insist that half the smoke is caused by bad stokers. The Murphy furnaces make ninety per cent less smoke than the hand-stoked ones.

At one time they used natural gas as fuel, because they have it on the place, but the supply was too uncertain for their enormous plant, but they still use it for lighting and domestic purposes.

Some years ago oil for greenhouse fuel made quite a stir, and among others our good friend C. W. Ward, of Queens, N. Y., went into it enthusiastically, but if I mistake not he has returned to coal. At any rate, Mr. Burki, although he has some fair oil wells running constantly on his place, won't use it as fuel. He declares there is more money in selling it to the Standard Oil people at $1.80 a barrel than in burning it in his own furnaces.

The Roses.

The crops grown are roses, carnations, mums, asparagus, orchids, and a few catch crops and odds and ends.

Mr. Burki propagates all of his roses by grafting on the English Manetti. He gets these now, pots them at once, and grows them on until the middle of January, when grafting begins. The house used for this purpose has recently been emptied of chrysanthemums. On these propagating benches there is provision for bottom heat, also for boxing them overhead with sashes. He is more successful with grafted than own-root plants, and only uses the latter when he has to buy stock. Once or twice in the case of own-root plants he has had trouble with eel-worms. Lime scattered in the soil allays this a little, but steaming the earth is the surest preventive. Also, he finds grafted plants are seldom affected by the eel-worms; all his experience with this pest has been confined to own-root plants. In grafting throughout stronger wood is used than is always the case when raising plants from cuttings, and perhaps this is one of the reasons why our grafted plants are best.

About half the establishment is devoted to roses. In the case of the carried-over beds he removes as much of the surface soil each year as can be done with safety, and replaces it with fresh compost. When growth is brisk and roots active, the beds are surfaced with a good mulching of stock-yards manure. He gets capital, sweet, fresh loam, the thin surface from rolling land. And right here is the advantage of a big farm out in the country! He top-dresses the field heavily with rotted manure, plows it over thinly, and harrows and cross-harrows it to break it up. This he uses at once, throwing aside the rougher parts. These tougher sods are carted to a pile and composted with manure. The old soil emptied from the greenhouse benches is spread over the skinned fields and cropped to grass or grain to mellow and sweeten it, and such crops are the envy of all the old farmers around there. After two or three years this soil is again fit for skinning for greenhouse use.

The Carnations.

Mr. Burki is discriminating. While he tries all of the new and promising carnations, the money-makers alone, be they old or new, are retained. And thus many a noble flower, magnificent elsewhere, is ruthlessly dropped at Bakerstown. His main crops are Victory, Beacon, Winona, Winsor, Lady Bountiful, Enchantress, White Enchantress, Rose-pink Enchantress, White Perfection, Lawson and White Lawson. There are half a dozen others on trial.

One carnation house on the slope is 40x350 and consists of three 20-foot ridge-and-furrow spans. The benches are five feet wide, six inches deep, on 4-inch close-together tile bottoms. Another new carnation house is 51x396. It has seven benches. How beautiful these houses are, with each bench a foot higher than the one in front of it, thus receiving great advantages in light and sunshine! A full span house on level ground is 51x350. It is one of Lord & Burnham's iron-frame construction, has seven benches, and is now a glorious sight.

Propagation is in progress now and will be continued for some months. The young plants for next summer's use, after leaving the propagation benches, will be grown in pots till they get into 4-inch. Planting in the benches indoors begins in May, and planting in the fields outside, the end of April, where the plants remain until July, when they are transferred to the greenhouses. Mr. Burki claims there is more money in the early indoor planted stock than in the double work of outside and indoor plantings. The indoor ones come into bloom earlier than the others. Besides, in a big place like this it is impossible to prepare for and plant everything in a month, even in two months. Besides, there is another thing to consider: In early summer some of the houses may still be in good bearing, and it takes considerable nerve to throw out a house of blooming plants to make room for new plantings. Last year they set 100,000 plants in the field. Here also the carnations have fresh ground; he never plants in two successive years in the same place. Here again is the advantage of the many-acre farm.

The roses and carnations are cut in morning and forenoon, sorted in the packing room, and placed in jars of water in the storage rooms until the night of the following day, when they are packed and shipped. The rose storage room is 40x60, and is run at 48 degrees, the ammonia system of artificial refrigeration maintaining this steadily. The carnation storage house is an arched-over, underground pit, 18x40, floors, walls and ceiling being entirely of concrete. There is a ventilator at each end. The temperature in winter runs about 48 degrees; in summer, 64 degrees. Carnations keep here splendidly. Here I may also mention that they have another cold storage house, an underground concrete pit, where they store peony blossoms in summer. By means of their artificial refrigeration plant the temperature in this pit is kept at 38 degrees, and Mr. Burki says he can keep the peony blossoms in it for several weeks in excellent condition.

Liquid Manure.

Mr. Burki is a firm believer in good living, abundance to eat and drink; a half-starved man cannot do a good day's work; neither can a half-starved plant pay for its room and keep. So he uses enormous quantities of manure on his land and liquid manure on his benches.

As a manure pit he has a concrete open air basin 40x80 on a hilltop. Rainwater fills this tank, and in dry weather he pumps water into it. Through pipes controlled by valves the liquid flows from this basin to a concrete tank in one of the great boiler rooms, and from there it is pumped by steam into every greenhouse on the place. In every greenhouse there is a set of manure water pipes independent of the clear water ones. A wire screen in the manure water tank sifts out any rough material that may come into it, but this is seldom necessary. The strength of the liquid may be diluted by running clear water into the tank. Stock yards manure is what is used. If the water is too cold a jet of steam run into it raises it to proper temperature. He has used a commercial tankage manure he got from the Buffalo stock yards and found it excellent. It needs no screening. It is dry and comes in 100-pound bags. But in view of the ease with which he can get other manure, this tankage is a little too costly.

Besides running the refrigerating plant for the storage and packing rooms, and home ice, last summer Mr. Burki made about 3,000 pounds of ice a day to sell to his neighbors, who came for miles around to get it. Last winter was so mild that no natural ice was saved around Pittsburg. William Falconer.

CALANTHE VEITCHII.

Among winter-flowering orchids it is doubtful if there is anything to equal a batch of calanthes when well grown. Commercially they are not much grown, but the few who grow them for market never have any trouble in disposing of them at excellent prices. C. Veitchii is still the finest of the family, although some fine hybrids have been raised of late years, notably by the late Norman C. Cookson, of Wylam-on-Tyne, England. C. Veitchii is the result of a cross between C. vestita and C. rosea and was raised by James Veitch & Sons, London, which firm also must be given credit for Calanthe Dominyi, the first hybrid orchid raised under cultivation.

C. Veitchii has flowers of a rich, rosy-pink color, the throat being of a paler tint. The gracefully arching spikes are often three feet or more in length and will carry forty to fifty flowers, or even more. No orchid in cultivation makes a more beautiful table centerpiece than Calanthe Veitchii. Lovely as its color is in the daytime, it is even finer under artificial light. The flowers last a week or more in good condition in a warm room.

Calanthes grow well in pots containing a compost of fibrous loam, to which has been added some rough, gritty sand, dried cow manure and a little broken charcoal. A 6-inch pot should be allotted to each strong bulb; 5-inch pots will suffice for those a size smaller. For medium bulbs three may go in a 6-inch pot. It is a good plan to start the bulbs in flats of chopped sphagnum and sand before potting them. The bulbs should not be raised above the rims of the pots, but be kept a little below them. Long and heavy bulbs may need a short stake to keep them from shaking. Water should be supplied in limited quantities until the pots are getting well filled with roots and the plants in active growth, when they require copious supplies. In addition cow or sheep manure liquid can be added once a week. Reduce the water supply as the foliage disappears. Calanthes enjoy a brisk, moist heat while growing; 70 to 75 degrees at night is about right. A successful grower thinks a crack of fire heat every night during the growing season is the main reason why his plants do so well. Narrow span-roof or lean-to houses, where a brisk heat is readily bottled up, suit calanthes. Blinds are required during sunshine in summer and are to be preferred to shade on the glass. After the leaves have dropped and spikes are pushing up, a slightly lower temperature can be given. After the flowers are cut, the bulbs must have a thorough rest. A shelf well up to the glass, and where no water from the hose will reach, is an ideal place. W. N. C.

FLORISTS LEAD FASHIONS.

Influence on Dress Styles.

In former years florists depended largely for ribbons and chiffons upon the wholesale dry goods and millinery houses. In those days, before the keen competition of today, no distinction was made between florists' textiles and those intended for general consumption; gradually, however, the demands of the leading decorators became so insistent for distinctive fabrics that a few houses studied the question of more perfect blendings and harmonious styles, and thus we evolved that branch of the ribbon business known as florists' textiles.

The houses that lead in this development were correct in assuming that the florist wanted goods appealing to the taste of his ultra-fashionable clients, the class who are large users of flowers, and with whom cheapness of materials is no the primary consideration. The results have been surprising, and aside from the gratifying increase of business we have seen styles introduced for florists' decorative purposes set the dress fashions for the following season. The Dew Drop chiffon, which we introduced as a florists' fabric, has become the rage as a dress fabric, being now sold in wide widths by the leading department stores. The joint introduction of this chiffon for debutante bouquets by McConnell and Thorley, of New York, at the coming out reception of Miss Marjorie Gould caused considerable comment at the time and no doubt furnished the inspiration to New York's fashionable modistes.

For next season we note that fashion authorities are proclaiming glacé and ombre silks as proper for feminine dress. These effects are no novelty to the florists' trade.

The point to emphasize is this: The exclusive florist, with his flower trimmings, now has an influence upon the dress fashions of the following season. His class of customers, being the first to adopt a new fashion, are particularly susceptible to the influence of innovations in embellishments for corsage and wedding work. In days of old florists used trimmings woven for other classes of trade; now his styles set the pace. In other words, the tail now wags the dog.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS

INDIANA A WINNER.

Mums are all gone and we are sorry to see them go, as they help to make the place look well. Mrs. Robinson was the best white mum I ever had since I have been in business, though the new mum Indiana, sent out by Mr. Knopf, of the Knopf Floral Co., Richmond, Ind., is fine and it will be my choice, next to Robinson, next year. I had some thirty-four new mums last year and this year, but Indiana is the only one of these that I will grow again in large quantities.

SIMON J. HIDER.

SMITH AND HIS MUMS.

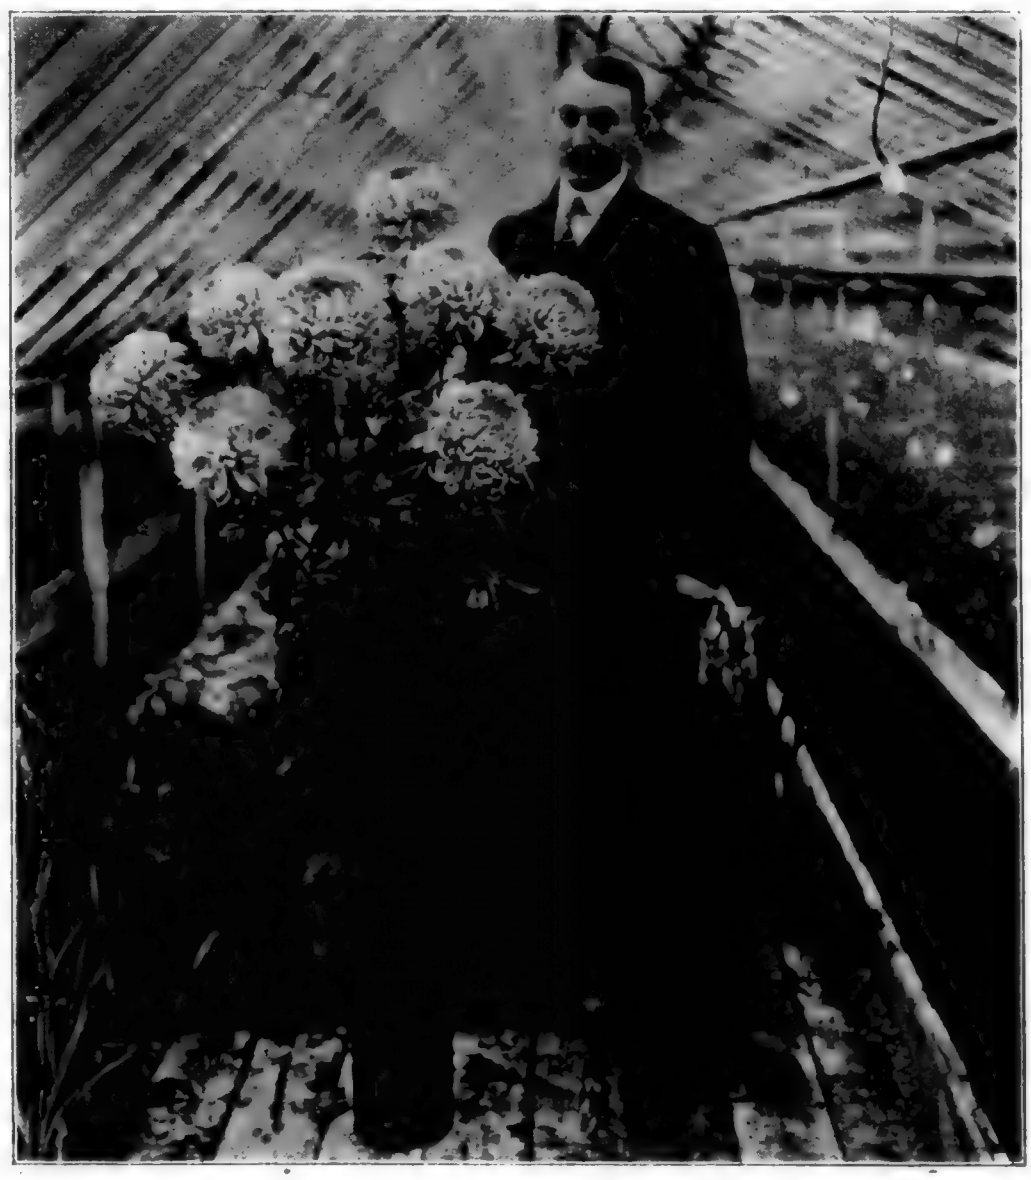
At the greenhouses of the Lakewood cemetery, Minneapolis, Minn., they have had remarkable success this year with a crop of Yellow Eaton, as well as other things. The accompanying illustration shows A. J. Smith, manager of the establishment, standing beside a few of the blooms. An entire house was flowered with the utmost uniformity. The flowers were all of great size, perfectly finished and all ready to cut at one time, so that the space could be cleared for a spring crop. A house of Primula obconica also was brought on and marketed in especially fine shape this fall.

Mr. Smith was the author of the paper on "The Employee's Side of the Question," read before his local Florists' Club and published in the REVIEW October 28. In several other cities the paper has been liked so well that members have taken it upon themselves to read it aloud at club meetings.

MR. WELLS ON AMERICA.

W. Wells, the widely known English chrysanthemum grower, who recently spent some weeks in the vicinity of New York, writes in part as follows to one of his home papers, the Horticultural Trade Journal:

"As I promised to send you a few notes about my visit to America, I now take the first opportunity I have of doing so.



"First of all, the Mauretania hustled me across without making me ill, so I thoroughly enjoyed it. As soon as I landed, my friends were there to meet me, and the reception I had was a right hearty one, which made me feel at home straight away. Another thing I enjoyed was the brilliant sunshine every day, all day long, except the last. I arrived at New York October 29 and left there November 17.

"My object was threefold: First, a holiday; second, I am publishing an up-to-date edition of 'Wells' Culture of the Chrysanthemum,' and as I wished to include a chapter on the way they are grown, and the varieties they grow in America, I thought I could write with more confidence if I saw for myself. I was very sorry to miss every mum show in Great Britain, the first time for at least twenty years. But if W. Wells was away, the 'Co.' was busy, so I have just come home happy in the knowledge that things can be done as well by others as I could have done them myself. My third object was to fix up an agency in America. Each year we send a set or two of our novelties to several firms over there. One or two of these firms endeavor to grow them as well as they can the first year, while others cut them to pieces and propagate them for all they are worth. (Isn't that just the same as here?) The latter cut the prices so low (below the other fellow's feet) that no one appears to get much out of them.

"Knowing that our (i. e., the Wells-Pockett) varieties do so well in America, I felt curious and anxious to know everything there was to know about them, and now I know that at all the exhibitions I visited the Australian varieties totaled about two-thirds of the whole of the varieties. It is a curious fact, and yet it is no puzzle to me now, for one has only to think that the heat in Australia is great, as is also the heat in America—the summer conditions are very similar—and considering that all the chrysanthemums are grown indoors through the summer in America, the heat is even greater than it would be outdoors in Australia.

"It is an old but true saying, as old Farmer Brown said, that 'one never saw a pig but he would eat a bit more.' That occurred to me when I thought there should be a bit more coming to me from America. So off to America I goes and I have fixed it up with C. H. Totty, a well known chrysanthemum grower and trader of Madison, N. J., to be our sole agent for America. There will be no more diddling, and it's 'up to Totty' to make his own arrangements so that he can make as much as he can. For the Americans say, 'Make money when there's a boom,' and that there is a boom in mums over there no one can deny.

"How do they grow their mums? Why, they just plant them in the houses on benches, because they cannot grow them outdoors (and because they can grow tomatoes, melons, grapes, peaches, cucumbers, etc., outdoors). They plant them from six to ten inches apart and run up single stems, and when ready to cut, they cut them with long stems, and send them to market in cases nine or ten feet long. Everything is done to save labor in America and I saw thousands of mums growing and being cut which were benched the first week in July, and the price ranged from 6 pence to 1 shilling and 6 pence each, and although I saw many sold at less, I saw some good, large blossoms sold for as high as 4 shillings each to the florists, who had to make a bit out of them.

"The varieties which I saw being grown for market were Merza, Appleton, Eaton, Enguehard, Balfour, Chadwick, Monrovia, Whitney, Golden Wedding, Winter Cheer (the latter was quite incurving and too small for their taste). Miss M. Hankey and W. Duckham are grown as specimen pinks, but Wells' Late Pink will soon become the best known of any pink, for a large grower offered to purchase every stock plant which I could spare.

"They have no market in New York like our Covent Garden, but each florist sends to the various stores, where the retail florists go to make their purchases. These stores all have their ice-rooms to keep any choice flowers which are not sold upon arrival. All flowers fetch higher prices than they do at home, but their labor is about double that which we pay, while coal is cheaper. Rates are not half what ours are, and taxes, why, great guns! There are none!

"I did not see anyone out of work, and the ordinary laborer gets 6 shillings to 7 shillings 6 pence per day, while anything of a garden laborer gets from 7 shillings to 10 shillings a day. Carpenters and bricklayers, etc., get about £1 a day, and these all go to work like swells going to business, and change into overalls for work, and a little black bag contains their dinner. Everybody seemed well dressed, and if this would not make an impression upon anyone who has seen so much destitution the last few years, I don't know what would.

"I met many, yes, hundreds of men who have 'gone out' within the last few years (some twenty years) and not one but what is doing well. The 'kindly remember me to so-and-so' was really hearty, and not one did I meet but made inquiries respecting the old country—'What is going to happen to it?' etc. But the answers I made to these questions I will not attempt to put into print."

MR. HIDER ON CARNATIONS.

Experience With Varieties.

In carnations the Enchantress family will be my choice in white, light pink and rose-pink. In red, Beacon has them all beat; it will average fifty blooms to the plant. Victory, however, has the best of it in shape and color and also has better stems. Did you notice the jealousy of Winsor, stretching out her long stems to get even with, if not the best of, Rose-pink Enchantress? Winsor knows when the flowers are worth having. I will grow my Winsor outdoors next year and house it in July. Sarah Hill can not have a place on my grounds. Lawson, Lawson-Enchantress, Lady Bountiful, Boston Market and Mrs. J. C. Vaughan will not be grown again, except a few plants of Mrs. Vaughan, which I will try again next year. Mrs. Chas. Knopf will not bear comparison with an old standby like Enchantress, though the blooms of Mrs. Knopf are larger when it is well done.

Now, I hope that no one will be offended by what I have said. I am just speaking from my standpoint. Some others may have an entirely different opinion, and we all, no doubt, would like to hear the story of their experience with the different varieties. I do not pretend to be a first-class florist, as I have only about 4,000 feet of glass and have been in the business only five or six years.

Cultural Methods.

I am now going to tell you how I grow my carnations. When I get my young stock into 2-inch pots I give them good, new soil from land never used before. I have an acre of heavy loam land, on which I allow such stock as hogs, horses, cows and chickens to run all winter. I plow up this land in the spring, take the top soil and make a heap large enough to give me all I want in the greenhouse. I turn this heap of soil once or twice to get it thoroughly mixed. I use no bone meal or anything of that kind. I use the same soil to pot my young stock, and when they have got the pots well filled with roots I move them to a cold greenhouse, about March 15 to 20. Now, there is no heat in this house at all and the plants just stand still. I only give them water enough to keep them alive. They stay in this house until April 10 to 20.

I spade the ground instead of plowing it, and get it in fine shape. Then I plant my young stock out, doing all the planting myself and seeing that each plant is set right. I have cut out the use of water in summer, giving the plants no moisture except the rain they get. I work the ground every week, except in wet weather, and keep the plants free from weeds.

About July 20 to August 10 I house my plants. I have my houses all cleaned well and whitewashed. I put one inch of cow manure in the bottom of the bench and five inches of the soil previously mentioned. When I have the bench full, I take a straight 4-inch plank, about two feet longer than the width of the bench, and by means of this, with a man on one side and myself on the other, we level the surface nicely. I now take a short-handled rake and go over the bed, loosening the soil so as to let the water soak through. Then I take the hose and give the beds a good watering. In about three to four days the beds will be ready to plant. Some advise waiting a week or two before planting any stock in newly filled beds, but I can not see it that way.

Before I begin to plant I have my glass whitewashed. Then I mark the bed lengthwise and crosswise and begin to plant. I dig the plants a few at a time and put them in just as soon as possible. I water each lot as soon as planted; not the whole bed, but just around the plants. When I get all my houses planted I go over the beds, and where I see a plant not standing well I first see whether it has had enough water or not and begin to coax it until it gets hold of the new soil. I never give any heavy watering until they get well established, but just use a fine spray all over the house two or three times a day. When the plants begin to show a bright-looking foliage I take the rake and go over the bed, loosen the soil a little and give them a good shower bath, just like a shower of rain, and from then on I keep the bed worked every week. I use air-slaked lime every month and spray with To-bak-ine once a week. I plant 10x10, but next year will give the Enchantress and Winsor 12x12 and Beacon 14x14.

RED SPIDER ON CARNATIONS.

Which is the best of the tobacco extracts to use as a spray to get rid of red spider on carnations? J. H. W.

You will find salt water about the best remedy for red spider. Dissolve a 2-inch pot of common table salt in three gallons of water and apply with a fine spray. Several nicotine products are advertised in the columns of the Review. All are good, some growers preferring one, some another. We use the To-bak-ine, and find it a splendid article. A. F. J. B.

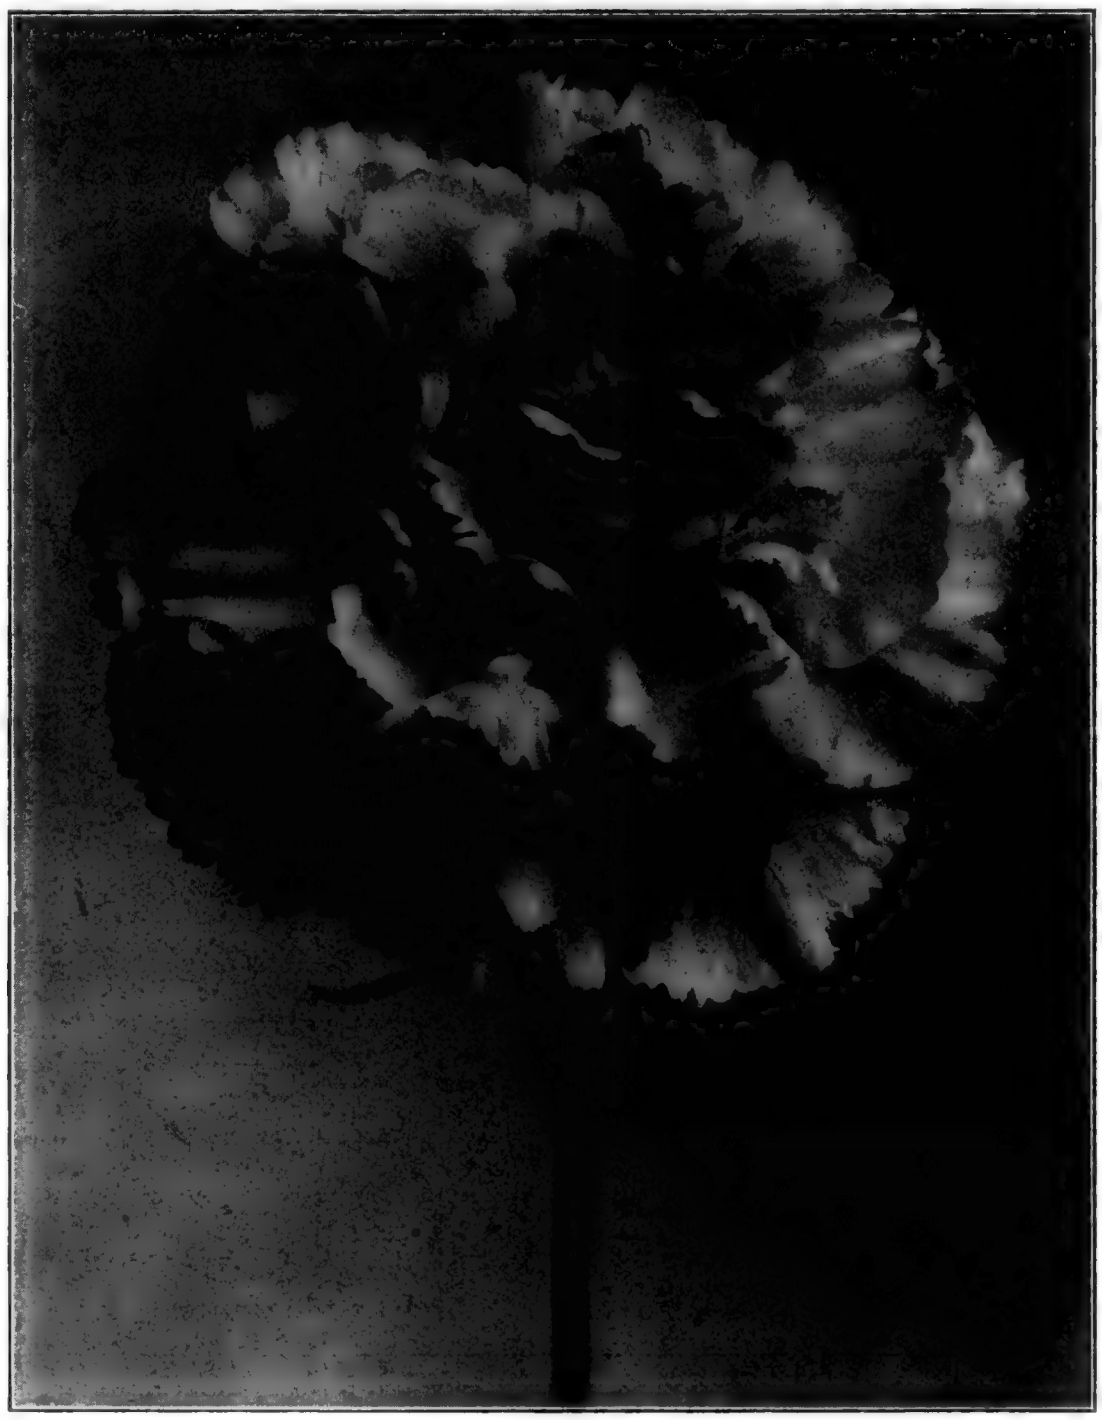
CARNATION ADMIRATION.

The illustration of the single bloom which appears on this page is a reproduction of a photograph of Carnation Admiration, made at the establishment of Charles Knopf Floral Co., Richmond, Ind. Several good sorts have originated at this place, but Mr. Knopf thinks this is the best thing he has yet grown. The color is pink, somewhat lighter than Winona, and it shows up splendidly under artificial light, where a large part of the carnations of this color must necessarily be used. Mr. Knopf says the variety is an exceedingly easy one to grow, and those who have visited his place this season report it certainly is doing well with him.

SIX WEEKS BEHIND.

I recently purchased a greenhouse stock, the carnations of which were benched in July. The soil is a light, sandy leaf-loam, without manure. The varieties are Enchantress, Rose-pink and White Enchantress, Bassett, Beacon and White Perfection. The plants are six weeks behind what they should be.



I have settled the soil until it is fairly firm, and given a light dressing of bone meal. Now, in order to bring them along faster, which would be the better, liquid manure or a chemical fertilizer? If the latter, what and how often? I am unable to get anything except fresh cow manure. Would a dressing of sheep manure help, and how long should I wait after having applied the bone meal?

J. H. W.

I would not advise you to feed your plants with chemicals now, and not until late in January or February. During the next six or eight weeks you are likely to have a great deal of cloudy weather, when growth will be rather sluggish and the carnation plants will not be in condition to take up much concentrated feed.

If the plants are robust and are only backward with the crop of blooms, I would suggest the following course of treatment: Give a light top-dressing of sheep manure, about one 3-inch potful in each row across a 5-foot bench. This will make them start up, and if you will make some weak liquid cow manure and give them a dose about once in every ten days, they should come along in good shape. You can also mix some of that fresh cow manure with an equal bulk of soil. Leave it in that shape for a few days and then pulverize or grind it before you apply it, about half an inch thick, all over the beds. You might also raise the temperature to about 54 degrees for a time, providing you will give them plenty of ventilation. It is doubtful whether this would pay, however, at this time of the year, when heavy firing is in order to keep the houses warm enough.

One thing you must bear in mind; you cannot force a crop of carnation blooms along much without injuring the quality. You will find it pays better to wait for a crop of high grade blooms than to hurry in a crop of inferior stuff. You may miss Christmas, but good carnations are good property any time up to warm weather. Especially is this true in a retail business like yours. Buy what you need until your crop comes in, but let your crop be good when it does come. A. F. J. B.

The Premium List.

The premium list for the exhibition at Pittsburg January 26 and 27 has been mailed to members and will be found worthy of more than a passing glance.

I would call special attention to section C, which may be called the disseminators' section. It was our intention to get into this section every variety of carnation introduced last season, and we succeeded in getting fourteen out of the sixteen varieties sent out. It is our aim to make this arrangement a permanent one, and we believe that, once we get it under way, the disseminators will recognize its advantages and will offer to list their varieties in this section voluntarily. We look for a good showing of last spring's novelties at Pittsburg next month.

On page 19 will be found the instructions to judges of seedling classes. This set of instructions should be of special interest to the secretaries of local clubs and societies, whose judges frequently are not expert at the game of judging, and to whom these instructions should be of great assistance. While, of course, every society has a right to make its own rules for awarding recognition to meritorious varieties, yet it seems that no promiscuous body of men could expect to devise a better set of rules or instructions than those worked out by a large body of experts and specialists. This society would like to see all local clubs follow these instructions when judging new carnations. We have had a number of copies of these instructions run off separately, and any secretary who does not get the premium list can get one of these copies by writing to me.

The unusually fine lot of advertising shows how much the trade is interested in the coming convention.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Pittsburg got its share of the cold wave which passed over the country, the thermometer being reported as low as 6 degrees above zero, with a strong wind. The weather became milder on Saturday, December 11, and rain followed on Sunday night and Monday.

The retail stores complained considerably about the slump in business after Thanksgiving, although they admit that trade was better than at the same time last year. The little lull, however, gave them an opportunity to get started on preparations for the holidays, and immortelles, boxwood, statice and magnolia wreaths are finding their way onto the counters. Plants, we are told, will be the feature at Christmas with all the stores. However, that is getting to be an old story, and there will no doubt be a better demand for cut flowers than for several years.

The wholesale houses report trade fair, their shipping business helping out where the city trade failed them. Those handling supplies report the demand better than ever before, and they predict, from the amount of business now being done, that the year will wind up all right.

Club Meeting.

The Florists' Club met Tuesday evening, December 7, at the Fort Pitt hotel, and it was an enthusiastic session. A number of new names were presented for membership and a fine display of Christmas plants was shown by the Phipps Conservatories, both at Schenley and Northside parks. Henry Negley had some fine cypripediums from his private collection. Considerable time was occupied in discussing the good and bad qualities of the various varieties of begonias. J. A. Peterson, of Cincinnati, was a visitor and made some interesting remarks during the evening.

Business Standing of Florists.

Several members of the trade, in the course of a little chat the other day, had under discussion the question, "Does the florist command the same amount of respect in the community as other men in the business world, doing an equal amount of business?" The assertion was made that he does not, and that when called on to make a decoration in a home and while on a first-class job, doing the work of an artist, he gets about the same consideration as a flunky about the house. Now, why?

One reason given was, that there is too much jealousy in the profession, that in the eagerness to get a decoration the prices are cut until a job which is worth $150 is given to the last man who gets a crack at it for $75 or $80. Then the people who let the order feel that, instead of dealing with business men who have something to sell which has a definite value, they are dealing with a set of men entitled to no more consideration than the Russian rug peddler who asks $10 and takes $5 for the best rug in his pack and makes money.

Another man's reason was that florists, as a body, are seldom identified with any great movement which has for its aim the betterment of his city or the citizens. For instance, why leave it to the women's clubs to fight and work for a more beautiful city, when the very people who would be most benefited, the florists, do nothing? Why do they not get together and, either unaided or associated with such a body as the Chamber of Commerce, educate the people in how to beautify their yards and homes, thus cultivating those traits which would eventually mean dollars in the pockers of the florists? There are civic societies in every community which would accept the assistance of the florists gladly, and eventually the communities would bless the florists and place them among the public benefactors.

Hoo-Hoo.

DETROIT.

The Market.

When stock moves rapidly at the commission houses it is a pretty sure indication that it is also moving rapidly at the retailers, meaning business is good. Such was the state of affairs in Detroit last week.

With the chrysanthemums just about all gone and enough dark weather to cause a considerable shortening up of all stock, the store men who received much funeral work were often in a quandary.

Unless we get some bright weather soon roses will be scarce for the holidays. Sweet peas are arriving daily now, although the supply is still limited. The call for holly, ground pine, boxwood, etc., started early this year. The stores are all doing more or less decorating for Christmas, using many holly wreaths, garlands, etc. Some of the florists are also working up a good stock of wreaths of all kinds.

Various Notes.

E. A. Fetters has engaged James C. Eastwell, formerly of Cleveland, to assist him in decorating and as a store man.

In anticipation of a big holiday business W. B. Brown, of Birmingham, has moved his family into the city until after New Year's.

Breitmeyer's fine, large delivery auto is the envy of the other florists these days. A horse soon gets tired pulling through snow and slush, but the auto seems to roll on livelier than ever.

At the last meeting of the club, J. F. Sullivan and A. Pochelon were appointed to take up the credit question in the retail business. The store men will eagerly await their report, at the first meeting in January. We all run across some poor-paying customers and hope that these gentlemen will find some way of eliminating them to some extent.

A fine new delivery wagon will help J. F. Sullivan in getting out his Christmas orders. Unfortunately Mrs. Sullivan has been confined to her bed for some time and there is no possible chance of her being able to help during Christmas week.

G. H. Taepke's new conservatory will be a great convenience in handling the rush. They are, at present, cutting a good crop of carnations at their large range of glass on McClellan avenue.

Nearly every supply house in the country had its representatives in Detroit last week, and they all report large sales.

Monday evening, December 20, the Detroit Florists' Club will hold a little show of Christmas plants at the Michigan Cut Flower Exchange. Every grower is invited to participate. In fact, no one can afford to miss this opportunity of advertising their Christmas stock.

The Bemb Floral Co. was busy last week supplying flowers for the society buds.

These are anxious days for the growers, who sit up nights to see that the flowers and plants, which mean so much to them, do not get chilled or overwarm.

House of Cyclamens Grown by M. Bloy, Detroit.

BLOY'S CYCLAMENS.

The accompanying illustration is from a photograph made in one of the greenhouses of Michael Bloy, Detroit, Mich. The entire house is occupied by cyclamens grown for the Christmas trade. There were 1,500 plants in the house when the photograph was made. The center bench contained 600 plants in 8-inch and 9-inch pots, and Mr. Bloy has every reason to feel pleased with the success of his crop

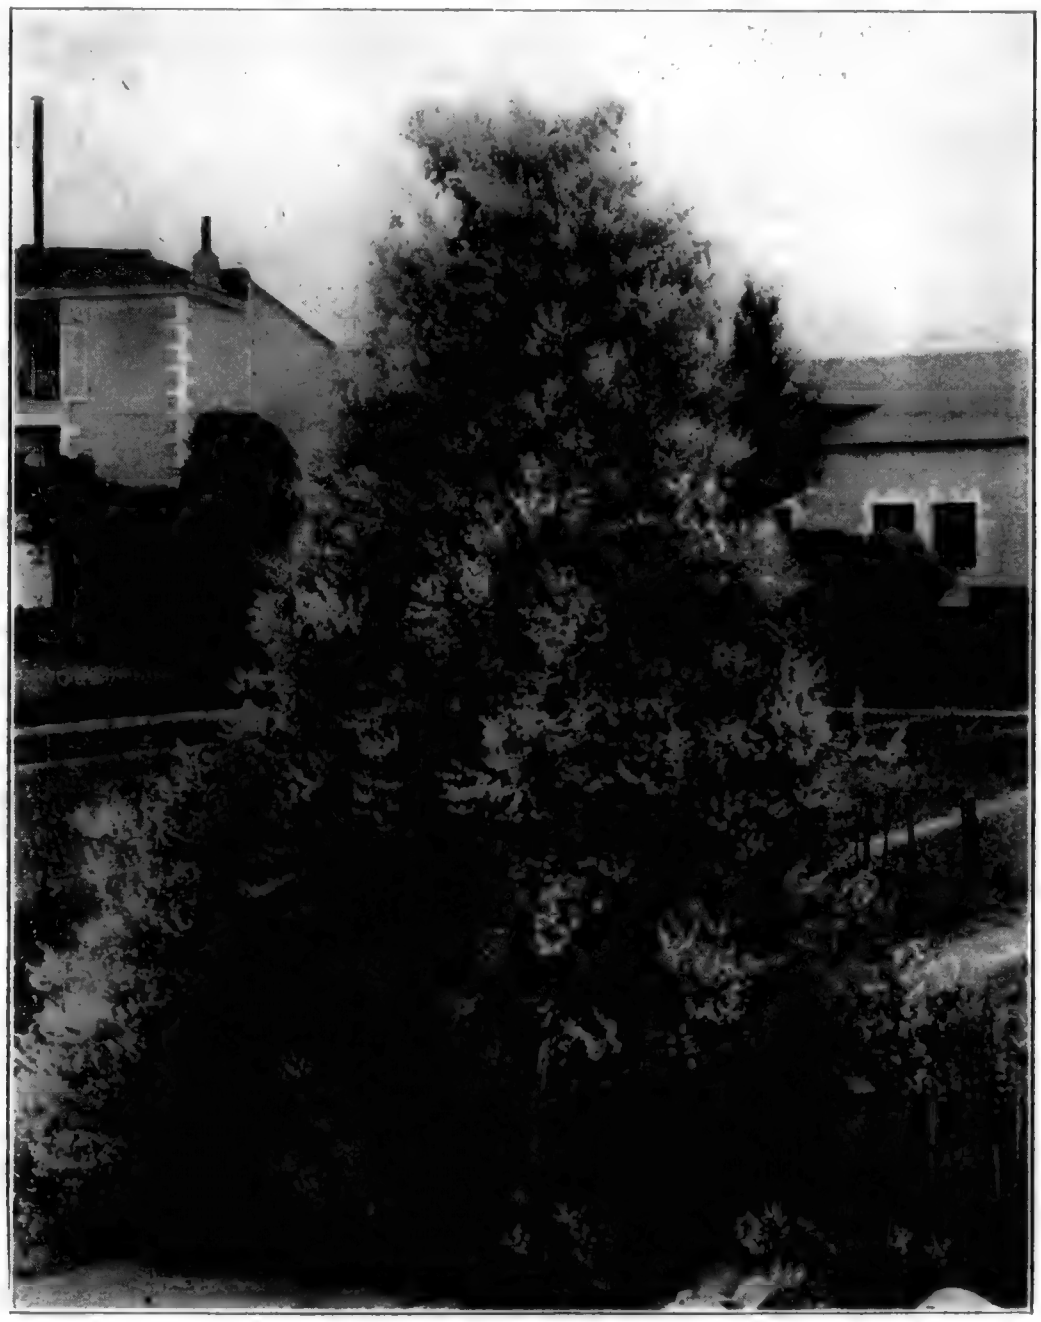
Detroit, Mich.—B. Schroeter is mailing flower buyers a blotter pad, with celluloid cover carrying a striking spray of cattleyas in colors.

Greenwich, Conn.—Robert McMillen & Co. secured a judgment of $1,115 in their suit against James Everard, a wealthy customer, the case having attracted much attention from the newspapers.



POLYGONUM BALDSCHUANICUM.

Polygonum is from the Greek, polys, many, and gonu, a knee joint, or many-jointed, and the common name is jointweed or knotweed. Indeed, many polygonums, and there are 150 to 200 species, are weedy plants and of little value if not, like the smartweed, which is a polygonum, a veritable pest. But among the small proportion of species that are of merit for cultivation it is of interest to note one is of special excellence and deserving of far greater attention than it has received. This is Polygonum Baldschuanicum.

Though first described by Regel in 1884 and grown to a considerable extent in Europe, Polygonum Baldschuanicum is still comparatively rare. It was first offered by Henry A. Dreer in 1900 and at Riverton it is considered one of the most interesting and showy of hardy climbers. Attention is directed to it afresh by the return from Europe of George C. Perkins, of Jackson & Perkins Co., Newark, New York, bringing the photograph reproduced herewith, taken in August in the nursery of Charles Detriche, at Angers, France. In speaking of the things of interest encountered on his trip, Mr. Perkins said: "I especially admired Polygonum Baldschuanicum, a climbing plant with bronzy white flowers, produced in great abundance all through the late spring and the entire summer. When I was across last year, I saw it in full bloom in May, and this year, during the latter part of August, it was a mass of flowers. I am told that it is hardy, it plainly is of strong, vigorous growth, and it seemingly would make a valuable addition to our climbing flowering plants."

Polygonum Baldschuanicum is a native of Bokhara and, while it is listed in few of the catalogues published in the United States, it is described in many of the books issued for the American trade by European plantsmen. It is a tall perennial climber, going sometimes twenty feet high. It becomes woody at the base. The leaves are cordate-oval or hastate, acuminate, slender-petioled. The flowers are small but extremely numerous, in terminal panicles, erect or drooping, by some described as white, bronzy white, or by others as rose-colored. It is said to be not only hardy but vigorous in growth and strikingly decorative.

It will be of interest if those who have grown it in this country will tell what their experience has been, for it seems remarkable that with so many people on the lookout for new plants of merit this should remain so comparatively little known.

The Market.

The inclement weather during the last week, no doubt, was the cause for the inactivity of the flower business in this locality. For a whole week, since December 5, the mercury was down around the zero mark, even dropping to seven below, Tuesday night, December 7, thus cutting receipts considerably. But its the lack of sunshine, for it has been cloudy for two weeks straight, that is being more regretted than anything else, because in many cases, it will retard a good many buds, which, with favorable weather, could be had for the holiday trade. Stock, which of late showed the effects of the moderate weather, is bracing up nicely since the cold weather set in.

At every turn now the topic of discussion is the Christmas trade. From present indications it looks as though everybody will get his share. There are more flowering plants than in former years, which may come in handy should the supply of cut flowers be inadequate. The holly, which has arrived thus far, is of good quality.

Various Notes.

Roy Currie, speaking for Currie Bros. Co., says that the demand for holly wreaths is good, considering the early date; also, that they have an exceptionally fine lot of azaleas among their stock of pot plants, which consists of a large variety.

William Zimmermann is authority for the statement that, mainly, violets and sweet peas were used in corsage bouquets, worn at the recent charity ball. In speaking of funeral work, he said that there was none to speak of during the last week.

The C. C. Pollworth Co., which also grows a variety of pot stock besides roses and carnations for the wholesale trade, says that the sale of poinsettias and Begonia Gloire de Lorraine has been brisk. Their salesrooms are well filled with florists' supplies.

The Holton & Hunkel Co. is kept busy these days booking advance orders, which are running way ahead of expectations, especially in carnations. Says Fred Holton, "If we can only get the stock, then we'll be happy." They have a house 27x150 filled with poinsettias, mostly in pans, at their Humboldt avenue place, which is a grand sight at this time and of which they can justly feel proud.

The Edlefsen, Leidger Co., which always does a big plant trade for the holidays, again has its usual supply of stock in better shape than in former seasons.

Chas. Schnell, of the L. S. Donaldson Co., Minneapolis, Minn., was with us the fore part of the week, looking for Christmas stock, not only at the wholesale houses, but also visiting some of the growers. He expressed himself as well satisfied with all he saw.

Mrs. R. E. Miller, of the Racine Floral Co., Racine, Wis., and J. Bourgaise, Racine, Wis., came up to do some of their Christmas buying and ordering.

It has just leaked out that an unsuccessful attempt was recently made to burglarize the office of the Holton & Hunkel Co. The party or parties gained entrance through a window at the rear of the store. A mess of working clothes, belonging to the store help, was found in front of the safe and a lock at one of the desks had been tampered with. They undoubtedly were disturbed at their work, for they left, failing to take some money which had unintentionally been left on the desk. Although there was no loss, it serves as a warning to all to take extra precautions, especially during a holiday rush, as two other burglaries were committed in the immediate vicinity on that same night. NEW YORK.

The Market.

Genuine winter weather is here, and a healthful tone pervades the cut flower market. There is no longer an oversupply of anything. Prices have hardened and the quality of the goods is now perfect.

Last week was dull until Saturday. Then the change for the better was marked. Beauties were in wide demand and a few specials reached record figures for the season to date. Of other roses, some remarkable stock of My Maryland, Killarney and Richmond is arriving; 42-inch stems are seen on these specialties and great is the demand for them. Bride and Maid, however, are not relegated to the discard by any means, and the best of them were worth 10 cents to 12 cents on Saturday, with 8 cents as a fair price for good stock. These prices may not be maintained this week, when Christmas shopping makes the multitude forget flowers completely.

The demand for orchids cleans up the market daily at good figures, and the out-of-town call is persistent. Nothing to compare with the Christmas display of orchids has ever been seen in New York. The cypripedium supply is abundant and of splendid quality and variety. There will be few chrysanthemums left for the holidays, and these are already spoken for.

Carnations are nearly all top-notchers now. Even the smaller growers are planting only the best varieties. The supply is enormous, but it all goes. If there is any surplus, the big speculators and the department stores sweep it off the boards. Prices have been satisfactory and the red varieties short of the demand. Alma Ward and Winsor seem to be the favorites of the white and pink novelties, though the latter is a novelty no longer. Lilies are going up and valley is strong at 3 cents to 4 cents, with the selected Long Island stock commanding 5 cents. Violets are now perfect, and for the special bunches of 100, 75 cents to $1 was the general quotation. They are here in millions now.

Of bulbous stock there is an ample supply, and, with the exception of bouquet green, nothing in green goods is wanting. One fortunate wholesaler in Brooklyn secured a three-ton shipment early, which is going at 10 cents to 12 cents a pound. Many are short and roping will sell at double last year's figure.

All things considered, the outlook is bright and cheerful and there seems to be no good reason why wholesaler, retailer and grower should not have the merriest Christmas of their lives.

Club Meeting.

The last meeting of the Florists' Club for the year took place Monday evening, December 13, with President Turner in the chair. The attendance was way above 100 and would have been double that if it had not been for the pouring rain. The special business was the annual election of officers, which resulted as follows:

President—A. L. Miller.
Vice President—Joseph A. Manda.
Treasurer—W. C. Rickards.
Secretary—John Young.
Trustees for two years—H. A. Bunyard, F. R. Pierson, Phil Kessler.
Trustee for one year—Wm. Duckham.

Edwin Pearson, L. J. Reuter and Alfred Demeusy were elected to membership, and F. B. De Forest, W. C. Wright and John Kessler were proposed.

W. H. Siebrecht, Jr., made a comprehensive report for the club's market committee, of which A. L. Miller is chairman, referring to the various meetings of the joint committees at the office of F. H. Traendly, October 27 and 29, at which the advisability of establishing a plant market at Canal and Spring streets was proposed and agreed upon by all. The city title to this land was thoroughly investigated by the attorney for the Plant Growers' Association, in which it was found the city had acquired the land, or part of it, in 1827, the balance of the block later, with the understanding that it could only be devoted to park or market purposes. Mr. Miller said he considered the property the most desirable place for a great city plant market and suggested leasing the land from the city and erecting a building suitable for this purpose. John Birnie suggested the three committees combine, and declared this the only place available in the city, because of its convenience for the early morning trade. After full discussion Patrick O'Mara moved the continuance of the committee, to make a full report at the January meeting, by which time the city authorities will be interviewed and a definite announcement made to the club.

The club's silver and bronze medals offered to the Chrysanthemum Society of America were won by George H. Hale and John W. Head, and the secretary announced their early delivery.

Benjamin Hammond's letter was read, announcing the sending of premium lists for the American Rose Society's meeting in New York and asking local enthusiasm and support in its behalf. C. B. Weathered suggested a committee of three to attend to the entertaining of the society and C. H. Totty, F. R. Pierson and Robert Simpson were appointed. F. H. Traendly, A. L. Miller and C. B. Weathered spoke in behalf of the American Rose Society and F. R. Pierson suggested that funds be provided without drawing on the funds of the club for entertainment purposes. A great meeting is anticipated and a fine banquet already assured. J. H. Pepper referred to the meeting of the American Carnation Society at Pittsburg in January, and a transportation committee of William Duckham, J. H. Pepper and C. B. Weathered was appointed. Quite a number announced their intention of a visit to the smoky city.

The death of John Seligman was reported. J. A. Shaw, W. J. Elliott and John Young was appointed a committee to draw up suitable resolutions.

President Turner announced his intended visit to Europe during the coming year.

The exhibits were excellent and attracted much attention. George Schuneman exhibited five vases of sweet peas. The varieties were Boddington's Snow Bird, and Zvolanek's Mrs. Alex. Wallace, Mrs. Charles H. Totty, Christmas Pink and Florence Denzer, awarded a cultural certificate. Frank E. Whitney, of Fishkill, showed a vase of carnations, Woodenithe, white, which scored eighty-six points and received a preliminary certificate. The Cottage Gardens Co. showed a magnificent vase of Mrs. C. W. Ward carnation, for which the thanks of the club were accorded, it having already secured the club's certificate. Charles Weber showed a vase of white carnations, Seedling No. 14, which scored eighty-two points, and a vase of his new pink, Seedling No. 12, which scored eighty-five points and won the club's preliminary certificate.

The house committee did nobly and a vote of thanks was given J. B. Nugent, Jr., for the turkey and cider from his own farm.

Captain Berry announced a turkey bowling contest for Wednesday evening, December 15, at Thumm's alleys, to which all the club members were invited.

Various Notes.

The plantsmen have already begun to deliver their holiday orders. Some of the biggest growers are completely sold out already.

The F. R. Pierson Co. is sending enormous quantities of Killarney and Winsor to the New York market, while the Alma Ward and Mrs. Ward carnations in addition keep Joseph Millang, the manager of the New York Cut Flower Co., hustling as he never hustled before.

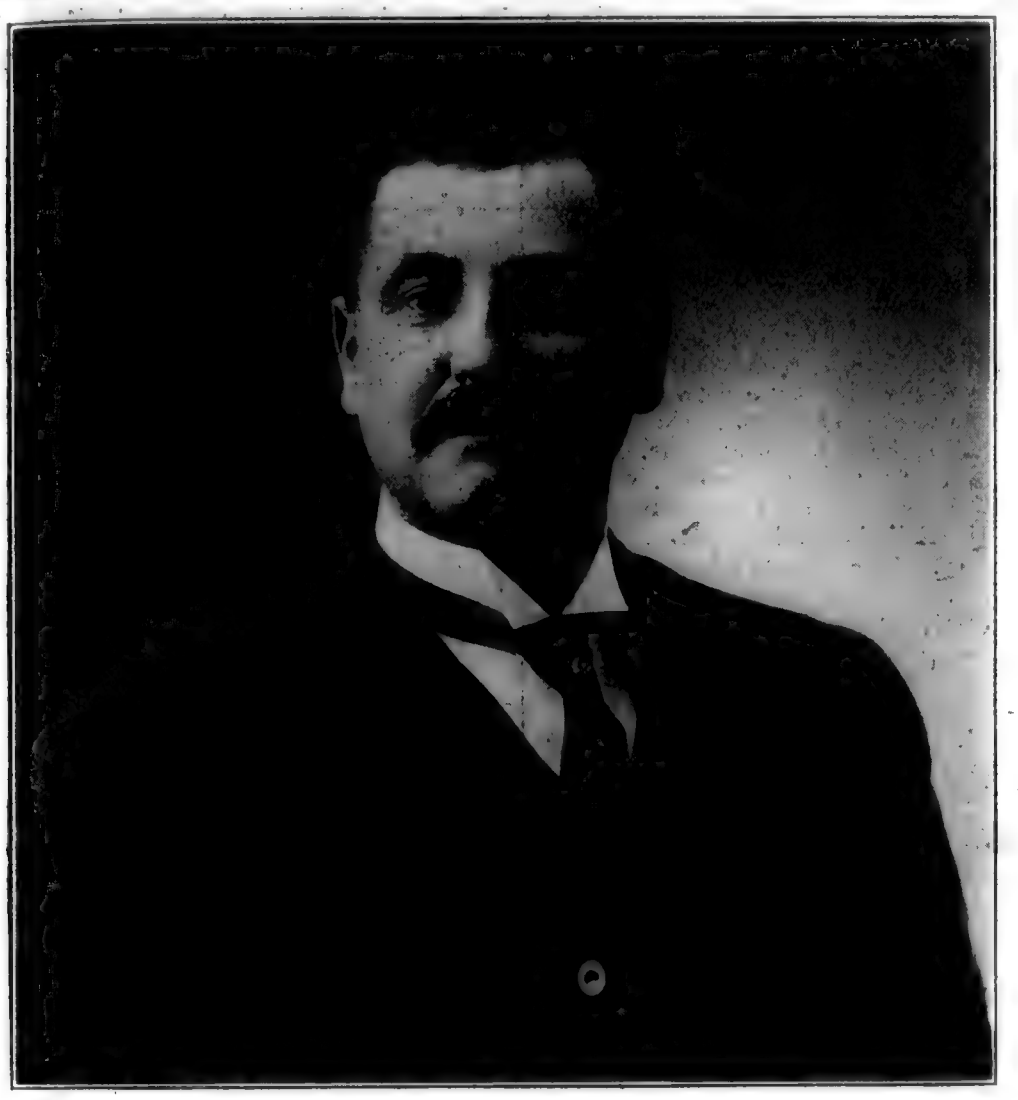
Kessler Bros. are doing a large business in Boston ferns.

Oranges, ericas and camellias from A. Schultheis, of College Point, already brighten many retail windows. This week will leave nothing unsold in his big plant. R. Dreyer's stock has drawn a host of buyers, and at John Scott's David McKenzie says everything in bloom and all the big and medium Scottii are already booked for local delivery.

John Young and some of his friends celebrated his assumption personally of the responsibilities of the big plant at Bedford Station Saturday and Monday, with appropriate ceremonies. The genial wholesaler will be greatly missed, but he will maintain a city office and visit the street weekly and so keep in touch with the happy associations of nearly a quarter century. With the 701-foot houses now and the contemplated carnation range, he will soon have one of the largest cut flower plants in the east. As stated in this column last week, he has arranged with Traendly & Schenck for the disposal of his shipments. Henshaw & Fenrich have been fortunate in securing the fine store so long occupied by Mr. Young.

Moore, Hentz & Nash report a great call for red berries, their annual Christmas specialty.

President Hauck, of the Growers' Cut Flower Co., who lives at Bloomfield, N. J., was in the city several days last week, and with the other members of the company, is enthusiastic over the results to date.



J. K. Allen has some handsome pans of pansies and poinsettias in his windows, an interesting side issue to his regular Christmas trade.

Charles Millang is celebrating his silver jubilee this month—twenty-five years in the wholesale business. In honor of the event, he says he has presented Mrs Millang with a silver tea service.

Myer, on Madison avenue, has taken a branch store on the opposite corner, where he has installed three Japs and two Japanese girls as assistants for the Christmas plant trade, handling imported evergreens and horticultural novelties of many kinds.

David Clarke's Sons are celebrating their sixtieth anniversary, and say this has been the best year of all.

Alex. McConnell says November business was encouraging and he has prepared for a big Christmas. He has this season imported heavily for his nursery and finds this branch growing rapidly in importance.

Abraham L. Miller.

M. A. Bowe will have a Christmas branch store, as usual. A large addition to his force has been made for the holidays.

L. F. Carrillo, of Carrillo & Baldwin, sailed for Colombia to collect orchids last week, and the Brazilian collector of the firm sails Friday, December 17.

Gustave Breckner, of Bayside, L. I., one of the oldest growers of the Cut Flower Exchange, died of heart failure November 21. The business was established by his father over twenty years ago.

Henry Arthur Baker, of H. E. Froment's force, was 45 years old December 2. He started with J. J. Perkins in 1880 and has been in the service of J. K. Allen, Traendly & Schenck and John Young. He has charge of the rose department at Froment's.

Ford Bros. are handling some fine carnations from E. N. Kroninger, of Allentown, Pa., and Henry Hession, of Flatbush.

Lyman B. Craw, of the Lord & Burnham Co., has fully recovered his health and has plunged again into the activities and details of the firm's business.

Bonnet & Blake, in Brooklyn, now are located in a wholesale store that compares favorably with any in either city in size and appointments. Double the business of 1908 is their estimate of the present year.

The Greater New York Florists' Association, under the management of George W. Crawbuck, has made steady progress during the last year, and Mr. Crawbuck says everything is far beyond the growth anticipated.

August Millang has changed the title of his big store from Millang Bros. to his name.

Lager & Hurrell are shipping a large assortment of orchids to James McManus, who says the advance orders for the holidays exceed those of any of the twelve years of orchid history making in which he has been engaged.

A. J. Guttman reports a November business forty-five per cent above that of the same month last year.

James Scott, of Elmsford, is receiving congratulations because of the stork's visit, Sunday, December 12, with a baby girl.

A. C. Zvolanek, of Bound Brook, N. J., starts Tuesday, December 21, for his annual visit to California.

Notwithstanding the inclement weather, a considerable number of those interested in insecticides gathered at the Manhattan Flower Market, on West Twenty-eighth street, Monday afternoon, December 13, to witness a test of Aphine. Palms covered with scale, coleus with mealy bug, and mums with black and green fly in abundance were operated upon successfully, with R. M. Schultz as master of ceremonies. Roses, carnations and chrysanthemum flowers were also dipped in the pure product at its full strength, to show its harmlessness to everything except the insect pests. It was stated that G. E. Talmadge is no longer with the company that bears his name and that the manufacture and sale of Aphine is now in full charge of Treasurer Ebel.

The annual meeting of the New York and New Jersey Association of Plant Growers was held December 7 and the following officers were elected: President, Julius Roehrs, Jr., Rutherford, N. J.; vice-president, A. L. Miller, Brooklyn, N. Y.; secretary, W. H. Siebrecht, Jr., Astoria, N. Y.; treasurer, H. C. Steinhoff, West Hoboken, N. J.; directors, Louis Dupuy, Whitestone, N. Y.; F. R. Pierson, Tarrytown, N. Y.; Julius Roehrs, Sr., Rutherford, N. J., and David McKenzie, Flatbush, N. Y.

Bowling.

The Astoria Club bowled Tuesday evening, December 7. Even Captain Berry, of the New York Club, has concluded patience is no longer a virtue and has joined the Astorias. The probability now is that Astoria will represent the New York Florists' Club at the next convention. The scores of Tuesday were as follows:

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

A. L. MILLER.

It seems to be really a correct principle, as well as a generally accepted one, that the men who have been energetic and successful in their chosen trade have thus given pretty good evidence of their ability to serve efficiently as officers of that trade's societies or clubs, if—"ay, there's the rub"—if such men do not refuse the offices because they cannot spare the time to give any attention to club affairs. The New York Florists' Club must be considered fortunate, therefore, in securing Abraham Lincoln Miller as its president for 1910. He surely has the qualification, also, of being well acquainted with the club, its methods, its aims and its needs, for he has been a member of it for more than twenty years.

Mr. Miller was born May 1, 1865, in East New York, now part of Brooklyn and of Greater New York. Forty-five years ago his father, Henry Miller, founded the modest establishment which formed the beginning of the present prosperous business at 290 Jamaica avenue, Brooklyn. Twelve years ago the father retired and was succeeded by his son, the subject of this sketch. The new proprietor, having a clear insight into the probabilities of the future and perceiving the opportunities for expansion that existed in the florists' trade, began at once to enlarge his facilities. He erected several more houses and, as business increased, he bought thirteen acres of land at Jamaica, L. I., establishing there a business in conjunction with the East New York business. On the newly purchased ground he built some greenhouses, gradually increasing the size of the range until it now contains about 50,000 square feet of glass, where he grows Christmas and Easter plants, carnations and cut flowers. On this thirteen-acre tract he also has one of the largest and finest collections of herbaceous and nursery stock on Long Island.

CINCINNATI, O.—The greenhouses of J. T. Conger, at Hartwell, were recently damaged by fire to the extent of about $500. Prompt action by the fire department saved them from complete ruin.

OBITUARY.

William K. Harris.

William K. Harris passed peacefully away at his home in West Philadelphia at 10 a. m., Monday, December 13, after a long illness. A devoted husband and father, a warm friend, a skilful grower, an able man of business, he is mourned by all who knew and loved him. Self-made, earnest, hard-working, farseeing, of the highest integrity, William K. Harris represented what is best in the world of flowers. A florist for forty-two years, a leader in his profession, with a reputation far wider than local, his loss will be keenly felt by many and his memory will be cherished in their hearts for years to come.

William K. Harris was born in Philadelphia March 10, 1838. His father, a seafaring man, apprenticed him at the age of 7 to a New Jersey farmer, who treated him harshly. The boy ran away when 9 years old, returning to Philadelphia, where he worked for Robert Dunk, a basket-maker and florist. He became a good basket-maker and continued with his employer for many years. Plants were at that time only a side issue, serving to keep the wolf from the door. As the boy grew into a man his love for plants increased. April 1, 1867, he commenced business as a florist in a small way, with the greenhouses of William Hobson, a botanist, at Fifty-fifth street and Darby road. Here Mr. Harris grew geraniums, fuchsias and heliotropes in pots for sale in the spring—not ordinary stock, but of such fine quality that, when Robert Buist saw them, he said it was odd that the best geranium grower in the country was a basket-maker. Basket-making was still kept up, gradually giving way to plants and flowers.

Mr. Harris was a keen observer and progressive. He soon had the best varieties of geraniums and other flowering plants in quantity. Everything that he grew was grown well. When competition brought down the price of geraniums, other things were tried. For years a house of Stevia serrata was grown for Christmas. Roses were tried, but with the exception of some wonderfully successful Jacqueminots, they did not do well and were dropped. William K. Harris never fooled with crops that did not pay. Another objection to the roses was that they stayed too long in the houses. Mr. Harris liked to clear up a house quickly, then follow with another crop. Pandanus Veitchii was a great money-maker; so were rubbers. He was a pioneer with the branching type. Then came the lilies, an opportunity quickly grasped. The story of the hit made by Lilium Harrisii is well known all over the country. The chrysanthemums, too, gave him a splendid field. Ivory, Miss Minnie Wanamaker, Mrs. Frank Thomson, Miss Florence Harris, Our Dear Friend, are a few of the best known productions of his camel's-hair brush.

April 1, 1891, Mr. Harris moved to his present place at Fifty-fifth street and Springfield avenue, where he erected the first houses of his present fine range. Two of these houses are of plate glass. They made a stir when they were built; in fact, they are still believed to be the only commercial plate glass houses in the country. Everyone gave Mr. Harris credit for being extraordinarily prosperous. He at once rose to the front rank among the growers. As a matter of fact, these plate glass houses were not the expensive luxury people supposed. A lull in the market enabled Mr. Harris to buy this plate glass at a low figure. Under its flawless panes he has colored Pandanus Veitchii and fruited Otaheite oranges in a way to excite the admiration of the critics. Mr. Harris' sagacity and skill in rotating crops is shown in his management of the shamrock. These little Irish favorites were sown, grown and sold in increasing quantities each year, just in time to make room for the final pre-Easter spread of azaleas, hydrangeas, genistas, spiræas and other flowering stock, for which he is famous. Many other things might be mentioned, the great specimen bougainvilleas and the sport named after himself, the ferns of Boston type, the daffodils, primulas, buttercups. Enough has been written to show what Mr. Harris has done and wherein lay his success. May it inspire others to labor faithfully to elevate our flower business standard.

Mr. Harris has been president of the Philadelphia Florists' Club and of the Philadelphia Wholesale Flower Market. He wrote verses, loved bowling and thoroughly enjoyed social gatherings. He is survived by a widow, two daughters and one son, William K. Harris, Jr., who with his brother-in-law, Mark B. Mills, have for many years lightened his business cares.

John H. Myers.

John H. Myers, a member of the well-known firm of Myers Bros., of Altoona, Pa., died December 8, as a result of drinking a large quantity of sulphuric acid, which he mistook for medicine that was near by. He was removed in an unconscious condition to the Altoona hospital, where he died within a few hours.

William S. Phelps.

W. S. Phelps, for about seven years senior member of the firm of W. S. Phelps & Sons, South Framingham, Mass., died December 6 at the age of 78 years. The plant at one time operated by the deceased is now in the hands of Lemoine Bros. Mr. Phelps grew carnations and chrysanthemums and forced large quantities of bulbous stock while in the business.

Sewall Fisher.

Sewall Fisher, one of the pioneer hybridizers of carnations, well known to the trade fifteen to twenty years ago, died in Boston, at the home of his daughter, December 5, in his seventy-sixth year. The deceased gentleman located in Framingham, near the present plant of William Nicholson, in 1869, and during the late eighties and early nineties raised and introduced quite a number of seedling carnations. Among these were: Crystal, white; Mary Fisher, variegated; Saxon, scarlet; Seber, crimson; Mrs. Fisher, white, one of the most popular of its color for several years, a fine outdoor bloomer and still grown in some places. It is doubtful if any carnation gave a greater number of flowers, although many were in those days sold as shorts. Florence, scarlet, was much esteemed for several years, while Anna Webb was the leading crimson of its day and twenty years ago, with Grace Wilder, Silver Spray, Heinze's White, Portia, Tidal Wave and Astoria, was the variety mostly in evidence.

Mr. Fisher retired from business some years ago and, while living quietly in Boston, was a frequent visitor at the various exhibitions in Horticultural hall. He was a member of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society and keenly interested in flowers, particularly carnations, until the last. The interment was at Edgell Grove cemetery, Framingham, December 6, when a number in the trade among others gathered to pay the deceased their last tribute of esteem.

THE REVIEW sends Scott's Florists' Manual postpaid for $5.

BALDWINSVILLE, MASS.—Gerry Blodgett has torn down his greenhouse and erected a larger one, 20x150 feet.

NEWTON CENTER, MASS.—Fire destroyed a small greenhouse December 5, at the residence of John McCarthy.

DUBUQUE, IA.—W. A. Harkett is sending his customers and others a handsome hanger in many colors, showing a splendid vase of carnations.

RICHMOND, IND.—E. G. Hill lectured on plant breeding, with special reference to rose hybridization, before the students of Earlham college December 9.

MANCHESTER, MASS.—The greenhouse which Roberts & Hoare have been building at Eaglehead is now nearly completed. The building includes a cold storage house and boiler house.

MICHIGAN CITY, IND.—Wm. A. Kintzele, who conducts the Floral Confectionery, says that business has increased wonderfully since he moved into the Grand Opera House building.

WEST NEWBURY, MASS.—The business formerly conducted by the late T. C. Thurlow and his sons has been incorporated as T. C. Thurlow's Sons. The capital stock is $15,000. The peony is one of the leading specialties.

ELWOOD, IND.—The marriage, November 29, of Mrs. Laura M. Duebendorfer to Chas. E. Stone, of Chicago, came as a surprise to their friends. Mrs. Duebendorfer has conducted the establishment at 1918 Main street for a number of years.

PAINESVILLE, O.—Werner Bros. have donated a large quantity of yuccas and Japanese ornamental grasses to the city for park purposes. The park department is giving special attention to the culture of yuccas at Baldwin park.

RAPID CITY, S. D.—James Glendinning has removed to the room on St. Joe street formerly occupied by the Boston store. This is a much better location than the former one, being nearer the business section and easier of access. The new store also contains better facilities for the display of stock.

WYOMISSING, PA.—It is said that the greenhouses of Heck Bros., Frank D. Shearer and Charles C. Stitler have lately been thronged daily with visitors, viewing the displays of chrysanthemums, which are of immense size. Heck Bros.' leaders are pink and Mr. Shearer's leader is a beautiful yellow.

FORT WAYNE, IND.—Miss C. B. Flick has installed a handsome fountain in the center of her store. The large basin of the fountain affords excellent space for the artistic display of plants and flowers. Some beautiful specimens of Italian ware, recently received, also add to the attractiveness of the store.

NORWELL, MASS.—Edward Jacobs is building a greenhouse, to be used for forcing rhubarb.

WESTPORT, N. H.—H. H. Bolles is erecting another greenhouse at his range on Hyponeco street.

MADISON, IND.—L. E. Hitz has worked up a stock of several hundred plants of that seldom seen plant of merit, Begonia incarnata.

ADA, O.—Henry Young has sold his greenhouses and business to J. H. Milnor & Son. It is understood that the houses will be torn down and moved away in the spring.

SCRANTON, PA.—John M. Brown and Joseph Kilpatrick have entered into partnership and will start a flower business in the Poll building, in this city. The firm name will be Brown & Co.

FREEPORT, ILL.—John Bauscher, Jr., has completed the new section of his greenhouses. This addition, which measures 63x310, was greatly needed on account of the rapid increase in business.

SPRINGFIELD, MO.—The Springfield Seed Co. is making several improvements in its equipment, including the construction of a seed testing laboratory and the installation of a new refrigerator for the display of cut flowers.

LANSING, MICH.—Fred Marquart, who has been connected with the Michigan Agricultural College, is about to form a partnership with Mrs. D. Dingman, of Portland, Mich. A greenhouse, to cost about $1,000, is now being erected.

WAKEFIELD, MASS.—Charles C. Ball, who purchased the H. E. Wiley property and began business here last summer, now has a prosperous trade. He remodeled the greenhouses and now has the whole establishment in excellent condition.

MARION, IND.—The greenhouse near the corner of Mill and Second streets, owned by Jos. Shane, was slightly damaged by a wind storm recently. The wind tore away and broke a large number of panes of glass, damaging the greenhouse to the extent of at least $30.

ROCKVILLE, CONN.—The partnership of Calverly & Risley has been dissolved by mutual consent, Mr. Risley retiring from the firm. The firm has been in business here for eight months and has greenhouses on Annawan street, Hartford. The business will be continued by Calverly & Co.

NEW CASTLE, IND.—Some property owned by Peter Weiland, of Weiland & Olinger, and located about a mile west of this city, was recently destroyed by fire. A new barn, a horse, thirty tons of hay, over 200 bushels of grain and some farming implements were consumed by the flames. The loss was about $3,500, with insurance to the amount of $1,800.

BURLINGTON, VT.—C. E. Gove has installed a new boiler at his greenhouses on Shelburne street.

SPRING FORGE, PA.—William Ness has just completed a greenhouse 24x100 and will cover an acre with glass as soon as the weather will permit.

GREENFIELD, MASS.—E. W. Todd has built a greenhouse, 20x60, on Harrison avenue, and will use it for growing vegetables, violets and other flowers.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.—The greenhouses of the Edward Malley estate, on Derby avenue, were recently damaged by fire. The loss was about $500, mostly due to smoke and water.

NEWBURGH, N. Y.—Henry C. Spengler, Jr., has added greatly to his facilities, on the Cochecton turnpike a mile west of this city, by the erection of a new greenhouse, 30x100 feet.

ROCKPORT, ME.—A recent fire at the establishment of George Glarentzel destroyed his greenhouses and a wing of his residence. The loss on the residence was covered by insurance, but there was no insurance on the greenhouses.

WAKEFIELD, R. I.—The greenhouse on the Shadow Farm, owned by Edward L. Welsh, has been destroyed by fire. Conrad Vernstrom, the gardener, succeeded in removing some of the palms and ferns before the fire reached its height.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IA.—It is reported that Roy Wilcox, oldest son of J. F. Wilcox and associated with his father in the business, has induced the daughter of their nearest neighbor to name a day in February.

TORONTO, ONT.—J. H. Dunlop has sent out a handsome and unusual Christmas greeting to his retail trade. A special cover carries a winter scene. Within, and attached merely by a band and bow of 2-inch wide red ribbon, is a four page price list of cut flowers and plants, combined with which is a little talk on the appropriateness of florists' stock as Christmas gifts and information as to Dunlop's facilities for making telegraph deliveries in distant places.

PORTLAND, ME.—E. J. Harmon & Co., formerly on Congress street, have recently opened their new store in the Baxter block. This is said to be the finest appointed and most up-to-date florists' store in New England, and compares favorably with any in the country. One feature that is sure to attract much attention is the electric fountain and fish pond which is in one of the windows. This fountain runs itself, the colored slides passing across underneath the illuminated water by the use of clock work. The little jets are all brilliantly lighted up, and together with the many fish swimming about in the tank below, make an especially attractive display.

OBITUARY.

William K. Harris.

William K. Harris passed peacefully away at his home in West Philadelphia at 10 a. m., Monday, December 13, after a long illness. A devoted husband and father, a warm friend, a skilful grower, an able man of business, he is mourned by all who knew and loved him. Self-made, earnest, hard-working, farseeing, of the highest integrity, William K. Harris represented what is best in the world of flowers. A florist for forty-two years, a leader in his profession, with a reputation far wider than local, his loss will be keenly felt by many and his memory will be cherished in their hearts for years to come.

William K. Harris was born in Philadelphia March 10, 1838. His father, a seafaring man, apprenticed him at the age of 7 to a New Jersey farmer, who treated him harshly. The boy ran away when 9 years old, returning to Philadelphia, where he worked for Robert Dunk, a basket-maker and florist. He became a good basket-maker and continued with his employer for many years. Plants were at that time only a side issue, serving to keep the wolf from the door. As the boy grew into a man his love for plants increased. April 1, 1867, he commenced business as a florist in a small way, with the greenhouses of William Hobson, a botanist, at Fifty-fifth street and Darby road. Here Mr. Harris grew geraniums, fuchsias and heliotropes in pots for sale in the spring—not ordinary stock, but of such fine quality that, when Robert Buist saw them, he said it was odd that the best geranium grower in the country was a basket-maker. Basket-making was still kept up, gradually giving way to plants and flowers.

Mr. Harris was a keen observer and progressive. He soon had the best varieties of geraniums and other flowering plants in quantity. Everything that he grew was grown well. When competition brought down the price of geraniums, other things were tried. For years a house of Stevia serrata was grown for Christmas. Roses were tried, but with the exception of some wonderfully successful Jacqueminots, they did not do well and were dropped. William K. Harris never fooled with crops that did not pay. Another objection to the roses was that they stayed too long in the houses. Mr. Harris liked to clear up a house quickly, then follow with another crop. Pandanus Veitchii was a great money-maker; so were rubbers. He was a pioneer with the branching type. Then came the lilies, an opportunity quickly grasped. The story of the hit made by Lilium Harrisii is well known all over the country. The chrysanthemums, too, gave him a splendid field. Ivory, Miss Minnie Wanamaker, Mrs. Frank Thomson, Miss Florence Harris, Our Dear Friend, are a few of the best known productions of his camel's-hair brush.

April 1, 1891, Mr. Harris moved to his present place at Fifty-fifth street and Springfield avenue, where he erected the first houses of his present fine range. Two of these houses are of plate glass. They made a stir when they were built; in fact, they are still believed to be the only commercial plate glass houses in the country. Everyone gave Mr. Harris credit for being extraordinarily prosperous. He at once rose to the front rank among the growers. As a matter of fact, these plate glass houses were not the expensive luxury people supposed. A lull in the market enabled Mr. Harris to buy this plate glass at a low figure. Under its flawless panes he has colored Pandanus Veitchii and fruited Otaheite oranges in a way to excite the admiration of the critics. Mr. Harris' sagacity and skill in rotating crops is shown in his management of the shamrock. These little Irish favorites were sown, grown and sold in increasing quantities each year, just in time to make room for the final pre-Easter spread of azale hydrangeas, genistas, spiraeas and oth flowering stock, for which he is famo Many other things might be mention the great specimen bougainvilleas a the sport named after himself, the fer of Boston type, the daffodils, primul buttercups. Enough has been written show what Mr. Harris has done a wherein lay his success. May it inspi others to labor faithfully to elevate o flower business standard.

Mr. Harris has been president of t Philadelphia Florists' Club and of t Philadelphia Wholesale Flower Mark He wrote verses, loved bowling a thoroughly enjoyed social gatherings. H is survived by a widow, two daughte and one son, William K. Harris, Jr., w with his brother-in-law, Mark B. Mil have for many years lightened his bus ness cares.

John H. Myers.

John H. Myers, a member of the we known firm of Myers Bros., of Altoon Pa., died December 8, as a result o drinking a large quantity of sulphur acid, which he mistook for medicine tha was near by. He was removed in an u conscious condition to the Altoona hos pital, where he died within a few hours

William S. Phelps.

W. S. Phelps, for about seven years senior member of the firm of W. S Phelps & Sons, South Framingham Mass., died December 6 at the age of 78 years. The plant at one time operate by the deceased is now in the hands o Lemoine Bros. Mr. Phelps grew carna tions and chrysanthemums and force large quantities of bulbous stock whil in the business.

Sewall Fisher.

Sewall Fisher, one of the pioneer hybridizers of carnations, well known t the trade fifteen to twenty years ago died in Boston, at the home of his daugh ter, December 5, in his seventy-sixt year. The deceased gentleman locate in Framingham, near the present plac of William Nicholson, in 1869, and dur ing the late eighties and early ninetie raised and introduced quite a number o seedling carnations. Among these were Crystal, white; Mary Fisher, variegated Saxon, scarlet; Seber, crimson; Mr Fisher, white, one of the most popul of its color for several years, a fine out door bloomer and still grown in som places. It is doubtful if any carnatio gave a greater number of flowers, a though many were in those days sold a shorts. Florence, scarlet, was much e teemed for several years, while Ann Webb was the leading crimson of its da and twenty years ago, with Grace Wilde Silver Spray, Heinze's White, Porte Tidal Wave and Astoria, was the variet mostly in evidence.

Mr. Fisher retired from business sev years ago and, while living quietly Boston, was a frequent visitor at t various exhibitions in Horticultural ha He was a member of the Massachuset Horticultural Society and keenly inte ested in flowers, particularly carnation until the last. The interme was Edgell Grove cemetery, Framingham, D cember 6, when a number in the tra among others gathered to pay their c ceased their last tribute of esteem.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

INCORPORATED BY ACT OF CONGRESS MARCH 4, '01

Officers for 1909: President, J. A. Valentine, Denver, Colo.; vice-president, E. G. Gillett, Cincinnati, O.; secretary, Willis N. Rudd, Morgan Park, Ill.; treasurer, H. B. Beatty, Pittsburg.

Officers for 1910: President, F. R. Pierson, Tarrytown, N. Y.; vice-president, F. W. Vick, Rochester, N. Y.; secretary, H. B. Dorner, Urbana, Ill.; treasurer, H. B. Beatty, Pittsburg, Pa.

Annual convention, Rochester, N. Y., August 16 to 19, 1910.

Results bring advertising.
The Review brings results.

Milwaukee wants the Carnation Society's convention in 1911.

Why is it that some men, always spick and span in personal appearance, do not seem to consider neatness a desirable quality in their greenhouses?

And still we grow. The white paper consumed in printing this issue of the Review weighed 8,642 pounds, or slightly more than four and one-quarter tons.

December usually is the month of lightest supply in the cut flower markets; January and February frequently bring the best and steadiest demand.

Not a few subscribers save themselves the bother of annual renewal by sending the Review $2, $3, or sometimes $5, instead of the dollar-bill that insures fifty-two visits of the paper.

The National Council of Horticulture has begun its season's publicity campaign with articles on Christmas greens. As heretofore, J. H. Burdett, who is secretary of the Horticultural Society of Chicago, is handling the work.

The schedule of premiums for the exhibition of the American Carnation Society to be held at Pittsburg January 26 and 27 has been mailed to members. Others interested will be supplied if they write to Secretary A. F. J. Baur, Indianapolis, Ind.

There is a growing tendency in the trade to allow trade prices on trade quantities sold in a trade way, without stopping to inquire into the identity of the purchaser; but some of the best houses still refuse trade prices to those whose connection with the trade is not known. A printed letterhead usually is accepted as establishing the user's right to trade rates.

William H. Bowker, Boston, is the author of a pamphlet of fifty-two pages, neatly printed, on "Plant Food; Its Sources, Conservation, Preparation and Application," which has proved so full of interest that a second edition was required almost at the date of publication. The pamphlet deals primarily with the subject from the viewpoint of the gardener in the open field, but it contains much of interest for all who are engaged in horticultural pursuits.

A PINK SHASTA?

A subscriber on the Pacific coast writes: "Some time ago we saw a reference in the Review to a pink form of the Shasta daisy. We do not find anyone offering stock. Who has it? We should be glad to hear of any grower who can supply a Shasta daisy of a good, clear pink. We think we need such a daisy in our trade."

The Review will be pleased to pass along the information if someone can help this reader.

PRINTED LETTER-HEADS.

Ting-a-ling-ling went the Review's telephone bell.

"This is So & So, the wholesale specialty house," said the voice. "We have an order from U. B. Careful, florist at Umpteeyalla; what do you know about him? Good for anything he wants, you say? Well, this is a pretty fair order, and he isn't rated. We thought he must be small potatoes, for he hasn't got a printed letterhead. Good, you say? Much obliged. Good-bye."

And then, again:

A Review man dropped into a wholesale florist's. The wholesaler had an opened letter in his hand.

"What do you know about this fellow?"—extending the letter. "Never heard of him? Neither did I; thought you knew 'em all. He wants quite a little jag of stuff. Oh! Well! Guess he's good for it. See what a nice letter-head he's got."

Which doesn't always follow.

But in these two incidents you have both sides of the case.

In this world a good many people take things at face value; they accept them for what they seem, without stopping to look beneath the surface.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The Chicago market has suffered a handicap for nearly a week. Following the severe cold, which at the beginning of last week ran 20 degrees below normal for the season, there came a few days of pleasant weather, and business began to improve, but Saturday, December 11, was one of those slushy days that are an obstacle to the transient trade so great a feature of the day, and then sleet, rain, snow and dark skies ruled for four days. The weather conditions scarcely could have been worse for the flower business. Both production and demand were reduced to the minimum.

Everyone in the market feels that if the weather only would settle down to something seasonable, business would boom. The shipping demand continues fair, and local social activities and funeral work are keeping the retailers fairly well occupied; the sentiment is that if we could have pleasant weather the slackening off usually felt just before the holidays would be less apparent this year than usual.

It has been possible to find all the long Beauties required in the last week, but the price has held up well and now is slowly advancing. The only shortage in roses has been White Killarney. A lot of buyers have come to think as well of this for white as the great majority of buyers now do of Killarney for pink; but the growers who planted only in small quantities now have begun to employ all their wood for propagating, so that the receipts of White Killarney are extremely light. Colder weather has brought an improvement in the quality of practically all roses. Killarney is fine and there have been enough to go around. Richmond also is in fine shape, several growers having begun to cut on their Christmas crops. Maryland, Jardine, Cardinal and others have their friends, but are not so much in evidence.

There has been no special feature in the carnation market since last report.

Killarney and RICHMOND

The greater part of our large supply—the largest and finest lot of roses we ever handled at Christmas—are the "special" and "select" grades. Splendid stock of the lengths that are in greatest demand, sure to please your trade. We specially want orders for Killarney—this stock will make friends for you and for us.

If your trade calls for the very best, extra long-stemmed roses, order our "extra special" Killarney and Richmond—nothing better ever offered—Killarney with 30 to 36-inch stems, Richmond 30 to 48 inches. A big supply of this grade.

Carnations

We will have an extra heavy cut of Carnations and the quality is right up to top notch—no danger of not getting your order filled if you send it to us. A larger proportion of Red than ever before at Christmas.

Our Carnations are widely known as always the most uniformly high grade large lot on the Chicago Market.

Beauties

Our Beauties are in crop at the right moment—splendid stock, mostly medium to long. There will be a shortage of Beauties, the crops of many growers being too late. We shall be able to take care of a big lot of orders. Don't wait until someone disappoints you—order of us and make sure.

Violets

We have for years handled the cream of the Hudson River Violets and this year our supply will be larger than ever before. Also the finest fragrant home-grown Singles. Buyers who wanted to make sure of getting the best Violets obtainable have already placed many large orders with us (we never have booked so heavily in advance), but we shall have an enormous supply—and all good. Let YOUR order come.

Miscellaneous Stock

Don't overlook the other items you need for your Christmas boxes—Stevia, Paper Whites, Romans, Sweet Peas, Valley, Lilies, Trumpet Narcissi, Bouvardia—we have them all in quantity. Poinsettias that are handled right and will sell fast. We can supply everything you need.

Receipts have been only moderate in quantity, because of dark skies, and quality suffered in the soft weather, but is now improving. There is a larger proportion of red and white, Enchantress being less in proportion to the total planting than it was last year. This will have an effect on the Christmas market; while buyers can get more red, they also will have to take more white, and Enchantress should later be better property than last season.

Violets have been coming in a little heavier, of splendid quality, and have sold excellently when one considers the unfavorable weather conditions; neither zero nor rain tends to increase the demand for violets.

Chrysanthemums are passing, but there still are enough in the market so that anyone who needs them can be supplied. Some late Bonnaffon are good, but much of the stock is ragged. There will be a few good mums for Christmas. Sweet peas are coming in more abundantly and the stems are getting longer. In another fortnight they will be an important item. Easter lilies and callas are more plentiful. Valley is selling well; some houses say it is scarce. There is a fair demand for mignonette, but not much good stock available. Paper Whites have been a drug, and Romans, while not in large supply, do little better. Stevia is everywhere.

Asparagus, both strings and bunches, are light in supply. Smilax, too, is shortening up. Boxwood is arriving in quantity. Many of the houses already are picking over their ferns.

The gyrations of the bouquet green market have been a theme of discussion. Almost every buyer one meets tells of having been asked $12 to $14 per case, but none will admit having paid those prices; sales are made between $9 and $11, occasionally a little more if the buyer previously has not been polite in his dealings with the seller. This is one of the seasons when a man who wants one crate gets a lower price than the man who wants a couple of tons.

Nearly every wholesale house has had its tale of woe to tell through the freezing of incoming shipments during the almost zero weather last week. The Rhinebeck violets suffered especially. Shipments which left Rhinebeck in Indian summer weather arrived here with the temperature at zero. If there is any one thing a wholesaler hates to do it is to inform a grower that the stock arrived frozen and was a waste. This time, shipments coming just a few miles were caught, and in one case reported the same grower's stock was frozen two days in succession.

Christmas Prospects.

The unfavorable weather conditions of the last few days have given rise to rather more speculation than usual as to the Christmas prospect. Everyone agrees demand will be large, though advance orders are none too heavy; the question is as to the supply. The wisest of prophets is he who says there will be flowers for all buyers; if not the flowers preferred, then some other flowers to take their place.

With good weather there will be a fair crop of Beauties, and the prospect for a shortage is drawing to this market consignments of Beauties from all over the country, from Philadelphia and from Council Bluffs, which are nearly 1,500 miles apart. A fair supply of roses is looked for, but with a big demand. Most of the wholesalers agree that carnations will be the most abundant of the big staple items, but sometimes it turns out that where the market believes one item is to be plentiful and others scarce, the exact opposite proves to be the case. Violets are expected to equal the demand. Poinsettias are considered plentiful; the demand is not strong. Of miscellaneous flowers there will be enough so everyone can get what he wants.

The advance orders in many houses are reported to be light on carnations and also light on the extra long grades of roses; the heaviest orders are for the medium to long roses, especially Killarney and Richmond, with some big local orders for violets.

Once more growers are urged not to pickle. The weather is especially unfavorable to it, and besides the commission man ought to be given a chance to treat his customers as fairly as the growers expect to be treated. No grower would approve if his commission man made returns with checks that were not convertible into money.

Various Notes.

Wm. H. Arthur, representing the National Clock & Electric Mfg. Co., of St. Louis, Mo., is visiting the trade here.

A. H. Budlong says 1909 has been a much better year for the J. A. Budlong estate than was 1908 or 1907. The latter half of the year has been especially good. Phil Schupp, manager of the store, has been out of town for a week.

H. Bauske is cutting a fine rose crop.

Anton Then has a full crop on a fine house of Richmond and is carrying them cool, to save as many as possible for Christmas.

The Superior Machine and Boiler Works is sending out a 1910 calendar carrying pictures of its hot water boilers, used in many greenhouses, especially in the north end district.

points of interest here last week on his way to Amherst, Mass., where he will take the college course in floriculture this winter.

N. J. Wietor is president of the High Ridge Improvement Association, which is seeing that the property owners get a square deal in the cost and quality of the paving to be put down on a number of streets in Rogers Park. The improvement affects a number of growers who have frontages on the streets to be improved.

John Muir's sister now runs the three sets of books kept by the Muir establishments.

Bassett & Washburn are making a trial of a new machine for getting out price-lists and other circulars. It is the Planotype, made by the A. B. Dick Co., which also makes the machine now in use in many wholesale establishments. The new machine prints direct from type and produces a fine imitation of a typewritten letter.

George Walther reports that a real estate agent who has the big building at State and Lake streets, formerly occupied by Pitkin & Brooks, would like to remodel it for the special use of wholesale florists.

Mr. Snyder, of the El Paso Carnation Co., El Paso, Ill., was a visitor last week, as was George W. Jack, of Springfield, Ill.

Vaughan & Sperry report that for some time past Wm. Dittman, at New Castle, has been cutting 150 to 200 long Beauties a day.

John Zech has been laid up for a day or two by rheumatism, and two of the children in the family have the whooping cough.

W. H. Hilton has been confined to his home for three weeks with rheumatism and there is little prospect of his getting out until after Christmas.

J. P. Risch makes a different report from most of the growers. He says crops are on with Weiland & Risch and that too much warm, bright weather will rush them off before Christmas.

Dom. Freres says he has considered business good so far this month. He sells the Muno stock.

Arthur Blome, who buys for Paul Blome & Co., says he never has seen a season when wholesale prices were so steadily in the retailers' favor, especially on roses, but also on carnations. He says he has been buying this season at least twenty-five per cent cheaper than in the same months last season.

Bassett & Washburn have sent the trade a post card printed in color, featuring the O. P. Bassett carnation for Christmas.

A new flower store has been opened at 607 North State street, named the Studio Florists.

A. E. Hunt, on his way home to Evanston from the Flower Growers' Market Sunday, December 12, was in the big wreck on the Northwestern railroad. He was in the same car in which two men were killed and many seriously injured, but escaped with a bad shaking up; it kept him at home a few days.

The John C. Moninger Co. has recently issued two new catalogues, one on greenhouse structural material and the other on boilers and generators. Each one is fully illustrated and contains a number of reproductions of blue prints. The boiler catalogue contains some valuable heating tables and general information on the subject, likely to cause it to be preserved.

The E. F. Winterson Co. says the business in Christmas greens is running away ahead of expectations, in a wholesale way, and a big retail trade is expected next week.

John Poehlmann reports valley in excellent demand. They are cutting in considerable quantity, but find it all cleaned up, even in the recent stormy days in which local trade was light.

Leonard Kill says a few bright days will add immensely to Peter Reinberg's cut.

C. W. McKellar finds the call for white orchids increasing rapidly, possibly because cattleyas still are scarce.

A well-known Beauty grower, one who is in a position to see and who uses his eyes, predicts that Beauties will be extremely fine property December 23 and 24, but that the January thaw will find the king of the Christmas market a vexing problem on the wholesaler's hands.

Kyle & Foerster report that A. L. Glaser, of Dubuque, Ia., was in town last week to place his Christmas orders, sanguine as to the business outlook. He bought heavier than ever before.

Theron Brown, formerly with the A. L. Randall Co. and before that with the Central Floral Co., is a holiday addition to the force of the E. Wienhoeber Co.

E. C. Amling thinks it is highly important that uniform grades should be established in this market for roses, the same as was done some years ago for Beauties, though it is hardly practical to adopt an arbitrary designation by inches of stem in the case of the smaller roses. As it now is, a buyer who is not ordering regularly often experiences difficulty in making his wants known, and a wholesaler runs the same risk of being misunderstood when he quotes a price to a prospective customer. Mr. Amling thinks many vexations would be avoided if both buyers and sellers could understand that a certain name indicated a rose of a certain quality.

Mrs. John Sterrett returned December 10 from her trip to Florida, where Mr. Sterrett recently bought a 10-acre farm for fruit. Since then there has been a display of grape fruit, oranges, etc., at the store of the Benthey-Coatsworth Co.

Hoerber Bros. are getting figures on the cost of eleven more houses to be erected in the spring, which will about double their glass area at Des Plaines.

Norby & Hoefle, of Des Plaines, have in the last few days been sending Kennicott Bros. Co. a big cut of Bonnaffon mums, as many as 500 at a shipment.

C. M. Dickinson was absent from his desk at E. H. Hunt's all last week and now carries his arm in a sling. It was found that his fall December 2 had fractured two bones in his hand. W. E. Lynch says he looks for the biggest demand next week this market has yet seen.

Harry Lubliner welcomed a daughter at his home December 9.

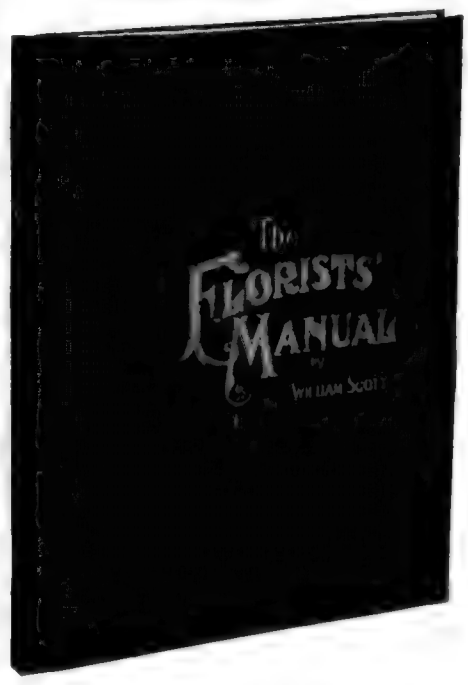
The Market.



Good winter weather has been our lot of late, and growers and retailers welcome it. Supplies have fallen off rather sharply, due to lessened production and the usual holding back for Christmas, but there has been sufficient to go around and some to spare. Prices are now showing a hardening tendency and, if we can only be favored with pleasant climatic conditions for Christmas week, business should easily break all records. Roses, which have not been selling well, are in reduced supply and moving a good deal better. Quality all around is good. Carnations show a stiffening tendency, but violets as yet hang fire. The cold weather affects the sale of these, fewer being worn on the streets than when it is warm.

Chrysanthemums continue to come in, and there will be a fair number of nice blooms of some varieties for Christmas. They do not cut much figure in the market, however. Paper Whites and Romans are plentiful and both freesias and Trumpet Majors have already appeared. Some good gardenias are coming in; these bring high prices, as do cattleyas. Cut poinsettias are in fairly good demand, the best fetching $4 to $5 per dozen bracts. Valley is selling quite well. Callas are rather more plentiful. Of lilies a good number are arriving. Stevia is abundant, and single white azaleas, mignonette and cypripediums are more in evidence. Smilax and other greenery sell well.

Business in Christmas greenery is unusually active, the demand for laurel and boxwood being particularly heavy. Holly is also in excellent demand. Plant trade is becoming quite active, azaleas, primroses, Lorraine begonias, cyclamens and poinsettias being leaders.

Club Field Day.

Ideal weather prevailed for the field day of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club to Nashua, N. H., December 11. A party of over fifty left the North station on the 11:30 express, having a special car to themselves, and an orchestra which furnished inspiring music on the outward and inward journeys. Arriving at Nashua Junction, the party was welcomed by George E. Buxton and others from the Granite State city, as well as a number of club members and friends who had come on other trains. Quite a number of ladies were included, the party numbering eighty all told.

Special electrics were waiting to convey the party to the Tremont hotel, where a splendid dinner was served at Mr. Buxton's expense. W. W. Powers saw that the party did not lack for cigars. Judge C. W. Hoitt presided and made one of his usual witty speeches in welcoming all to Nashua. He called upon President Downs, who expressed his pleasure at seeing so many present and thanked the Nashua gentlemen for their splendid welcome.

After dinner, which was enlivened by orchestral selections, cars were taken to George E. Buxton's establishment. Everything here was found in apple-pie order and the condition of the carnations caused many expressions of pleasure. Pink Beauty, a seedling raised here, showed up splendidly, color a rich, rosy pink, flowers large and full, with excellent stems. A house of white seedlings was superb. Granite State was a veritable mass of bloom and buds and should prove a winner. No. 3 and No. 9, also pure whites, were equally good. With big blooms, excellent calyxes, strong stems, all should be heard from again. Other excellent seedlings were noted and no second rate ones were observed.

Among standard sorts, Beacon was in heavy crop. Fenn was a leading crimson. A few Ruby were being tried and looked well. Winsor was carrying a heavy crop, as was Melody and Variegated Lawson. Enchantress and Rose-pink Enchantress were still among the top-notchers. Pink Delight carried a heavy crop and is well liked. Afterglow looked better than it is usually seen. Winona and White Perfection were also in first-class shape. Boiler-rooms, packing-shed, flower room and everything else on the place were scrupulously clean. Further refreshments were served here, and the party photographed before leaving.

Judge Hoitt insisted on a short call being made at his handsome residence on the return journey, and his aviaries of rare birds were inspected. The judge, not to be outdone in hospitality, compelled the party to accept something more for the inner man.

August Gaedeke & Co. were next visited and darkness fell by the time the houses had been looked over. Carnations here looked extremely well. A house of Fair Maid was particularly good. Bay State, White Perfection, Beacon, Enchantress and others were all well done. There were also excellent batches of Easter lilies, Lorraine begonias, poinsettias, azaleas and a fine general line of stock, in which the firm does a large business. Gaedeke & Co. also furnished a most generous collation for the visitors, and the open-hearted hospitality and kindness received in Nashua on the first club outing to the Granite state will long live as a pleasant memory with all who were fortunate enough to be present. Rousing cheers were given the generous hosts before leaving, and Boston was reached in good season, all present voting the outing the best ever.

A few of those present were: W. Nicholson, W. R. Nicholson, A. Roper, A. Christensen, William Downs, M. A. Patten, E. F. Wheeler, W. C. Stickel, P. M. Miller, T. H. Westwood, T. J. Grey, J. P. A. Various Notes.

A. Leuthy returned December 9 from a visit among the leading plant growers for the New York and Philadelphia markets. He reports stock as looking good and well sold out. Mr. Leuthy has 3,500 azaleas right for Christmas and an abundance of other stock.

W. W. Edgar & Co. are doing a rousing trade at present in azaleas, Lorraine begonias and other Easter plants, and will have little left in the way of blooming plants for Christmas.

Visitors last week included A. Zirkman, of M. Rice & Co., Philadelphia; James Comont, of James Carter & Co., London; W. B. Cleves, representing A. T. Boddington, New York.

A Japanese garden in one of T. F. Galvin's windows has attracted much attention the last few days. It is the work of W. W. Rawson & Co.

Edgar Bros. had what might have easily proved a disastrous boiler explosion December 9. A boiler which had not been in service for some time was started and, all valves being closed, an explosion occurred which lifted the boiler out of place a few feet, blew out the back and destroyed all connections, lifted the floor of the shed and blew out some windows. No one was near at the time of the explosion. Messrs. Edgar hastened to get in a temporary boiler and managed to keep the houses above freezing.

Backer & Co. have a fine lot of poinsettias for Christmas, bracts averaging twenty to twenty-four inches in diameter.

N. F. Comley is still cutting some extra fine Nonin and Eaton chrysanthemums and has a fine lot of Intensity for Christmas.

The first freesia and Trumpet Major narcissus seen this season arrived December 11 from the E. Sutermeister estate.

Montrose Greenhouses will have a heavy cut of white and pink Killarney and extra fine Richmond for Christmas.

The club meeting December 21 promises to bring out the biggest attendance of the year. There promise to be keen contests for president, vice-president and the executive board.

May Day and Shasta carnations are unusually fine with Patten & Co., of Tewksbury, at present.

J. Gale and L. E. Small are handling extra fine double violets at Park Street Market No. 2.

Henry M. Robinson & Co. are experiencing the greatest rush of business in their history and are having to work night and day to keep abreast of their orders.

Mann Bros. are handling extra fine lots of lilies and bulbous stock in variety

Niessen's
News Column

We can truly say that our supply of roses for the

is the most superb stock we have ever offered to the trade. We doubt if it is equaled in the Eastern market. Particular attention we would call to the three big sellers:

BEAUTIES
WHITE and PINK KILLARNEY
RICHMOND

We will have them in immense quantity, and you can depend on our filling your order properly. We will have plenty of Richmonds with stems 30" and 36" long, good, clean foliage, and large, perfect flowers. In the better grades of roses you will find the best values.

CARNATIONS

Will be in fine form, and our supply consists, principally, of the better varieties. They will be subjected to the closest inspection to guard against anything not in the best condition.

In Bulbous Stock we will have a large supply of

STEVIA

Very desirable stock where something inexpensive is wanted.

To add variety to your supply, and increased choice for your customers, we can recommend

CYPRIPEDIUMS
DAISIES, white and yellow
SWEET PEAS
MIGNONETTE
POINSETTIAS VALLEY
and a large stock of choice

Double and Single Violets

WITH OUR UNUSUALLY FINE SUPPLY OF CUT FLOWERS FOR CHRISTMAS, WE EXPECT TO GAIN NEW CUSTOMERS AND MAKE THE OLD ONES MORE SOLID.

The Finest Holly

We have some cases of extra-selected, exceedingly well berried, with glossy green foliage. This stock has been carefully chosen to satisfy the wants of those who require Holly above the ordinary prices, $6.00 per case.

Select Holly

Good stock, well berried, with nice foliage; equal to strictly first-class, $5.00 per case.

Christmas Flowers

We have an excellent stock of all kinds of Christmas flowers and especially call your attention to our:—

Fancy Carnations, white, pink and red; Valley, large bells, well hardened; Double Violets, both Lady Campbell and Marie Louise; Single Violets, ordinary and fancy; Poinsettias, large flowers on long, medium and short stems. These are a few of Our Specialties. We have all other varieties in the market. Order early.

at present. They are also having an excellent plant trade.

William Nicholson thinks White Enchantress a much better paying white carnation than White Perfection, with many less second-grade flowers.

The past bulb season was the best Boston dealers ever had. Hardly a bulb of any kind was left over, and many late orders could be only partially filled.

W. J. Goddard is finding Carnation Pink Delight a wonderfully free bloomer and fine seller. He prefers White Perfection to White Enchantress.

Julius A. Zinn opened his new store on Park street December 10. His large window was finely arranged and attracted much notice. The new location is a vast improvement over the Beacon street store vacated. W. N. Craig.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

The first two weeks in December have been in marked contrast. The week ending December 8 was so poor, just at a time when improvement was expected, that a deep shadow was cast over the market. The second week, ending December 15, has shown a marked improvement. The volume of business was large, at prices that were moderate in most cases. The features of the first week were the strength of Beauties, orchids, gardenias and valley, with a surprising weakness in carnations and in so-called small roses. The features of the last week were the improvement in the small roses, in which Beauties have shared, and in carnations. This improvement has affected the cheaper rather than the fancy grades. Fancy roses are less called for than ordinarily in mid-December, and when called for the price is more closely scrutinized. White roses have been quite scarce, commanding a higher price than pink. White Killarney has been the leading white, few growers being able to produce Bride that will compare favorably with White Killarney now that it is rounding into form.

The price of carnations has advanced, anything worth having commanding 2 cents, while fancies bring 4, 5 and 6 cents. Beacon, Enchantress, Winsor and White Perfection are all represented in the fancy class.

Violets are decidedly off crop as regards singles. The doubles also are less plentiful, but only in fair demand. Cattleyas are increasing in demand as the supply increases. Prices remain unchanged. Gardenias have weakened a little. There are now several grades a step apart. Callas are in strong demand, the rather light supply being absorbed rapidly. Easter lilies are plentiful and seem to sell better with the wane of the autumn queen. Some fine snapdragons are offered. There is a little bouvardia and more mignonette, daisies and pansies. The winter-flowering sweet peas can be had in all colors. Greens have improved. Smilax is sharing in the demand for adiantum and asparagus. The valley situation is easier.

The supply of all kinds of Christmas greens except lycopodium is large. Holly is particularly fine, although the best grade can only be had in limited quantity. The demand for boxwood is heavy. All dealers are short on lycopodium.

Christmas Prospects.

The best judges in the cut flower market believe that the stock of high grade flowers will be large—larger in proportion to the ordinary grades than ever before. They predict that there will be no shortage of anything unless the weather should be adverse. While it is difficult to forecast prices, it is probable that last year's basis will be somewhere near the mark.

Christmas Plants.

Improved varieties and improved culture have given us Christmas blooming plants in every way equal to the city's reputation for Christmas foliage plants and for foliage plants at all seasons of the year. We have this season in and about Philadelphia some exceptional stock, stock that the slangy would describe as "classy," or possibly "nifty,"

P/M QUALITY

BEAUTIES

Philadelphia Growers have a national reputation for the quality of their Beauties and it is with pride that we can say the best are coming to the P/M establishment. They are now cutting freely all lengths, especially the better grades, quality, deep rich color and long, heavy bud, satisfying the most critical buyers.

IMMORTELLES, all colors, in any quantity. We can fill your rush orders instantly.

CREPE PAPERS, water-proof and pleated, in all best flower shades; very choice.

HOLLY WREATHS, well berried, handsome and more lasting than the ordinary stock.

PORTO RICAN MATS, just received; very desirable.

HOLIDAY BASKETS, with and without handles, round, oval in shape, or any size you desire. Willow, Reed or Rattan, plain or fancy. Be sure to have plenty on hand, for you can turn your short-stemmed flowers to account, we think, as you can in no other way. Just think of those odds and ends of poinsettias, Romans and what-nots, and the pretty combinations you can make with the right kind of basket.

FERN FRONDS. Durable, electrically prepared, perfect fronds of Adiantum, Pteris, Asparagus, Araucaria; something you can use anywhere; combining the grace of the fern with—well, not the strength of the oak, but they certainly have a thousand times more strength than the delicate ferns you generally use.

Florists' Baskets

Our aim is Artistic Baskets; that is what makes them appeal to discriminating people. Every basket is made by hand, and finished as if our whole reputation depended upon that particular basket. Madison Basketcraft Co.'s baskets are designed for use as well as beauty. They are practical, indestructible, made of willow in odd and artistic shapes, and colored in various delicate tones. Greens, gun metal and browns are the best colors.

a plantsman's triumph under adverse weather conditions.

In order to get an expert's view on these improvements, I went to Robert A. Craig and asked him to tell me briefly what had been accomplished during the last year. Mr. Craig pointed out cyclamen of perfect shape, with flowers of almost orchid size, glossy green foliage, an improved strain from selected seed; begonias of the Lorraine type, almost ball-shaped, hard and covered with bloom, all pinched stock; poinsettia with large, sturdy bracts, and, best of all, foliage down to the pot, evidently the result of studying nature's way. There were other things, but these are sufficient to show why I was convinced that the brains and enterprise that have placed Philadelphia growers among the front rank of plantsmen will keep them there for many a long day to come.

Various Notes.

The new greenhouse on the seed trial farm of the H. F. Michell Co. has been completed.

Miss Dundore, with Harry Shroyer, Lancaster, Pa.; A. B. Ellsworth and Mrs. Ellsworth, Allentown, Pa.; Ernest Ashley, Allentown, Pa.; A. N. Pierson, Cromwell, Conn., and Arthur Langhanz, Wheeling, W. Va., were here recently.

Arthur Philips Niessen has come to make his home with the secretary and treasurer of the Leo Niessen Co., bringing much brightness with him.

The Henry A. Dreer Co. took advantage of the mild weather to push out orders for what is promising to be an excellent Christmas in decorative plants and ferns.

Alexander Montgomery, Natick, Mass., not long since honored Wyndmoor and Dorranceton by a visit.

The Florex Gardens have begun forcing lily of the valley pips. They have commenced shipping the so bell-like flowers to Eugene Bernheimer.

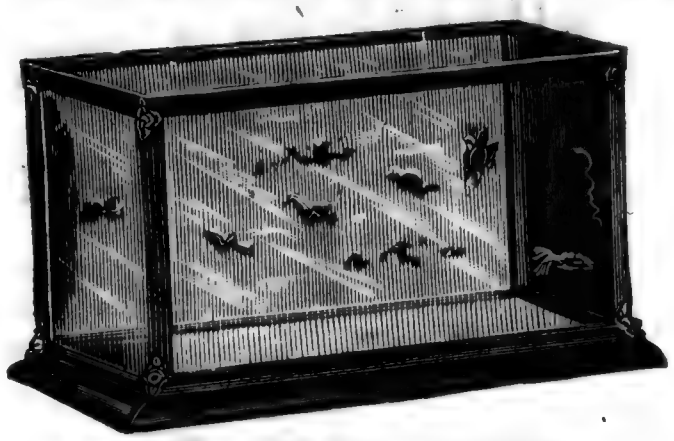
William P. Craig is in the west middle states this week.

William J. Baker finds a ready market for callas, now coming in more freely.

There have been many visitors to the Rising Eastern Market during the last few days. They include Loyd G. Blick, Norfolk, Va.; George Cooke and Mrs. Cooke, Washington, D. C.; Frank B. Rine and Mrs. Rine, Lewisburg, Pa.; F. G. Berger, E. A. Seidewitz, and Charles and William Feast, all of Baltimore; W. J. Carney, of J. B. Murdoch Co., Pittsburg; Benjamin Passmore, Malvern, Pa., and a representative of the Loudon Nursery Co.

William K. Harris died December 13 after a long illness at his home in West Philadelphia.

Stephen Ager was scheduled to speak before the Germantown Horticultural Society's December meeting on "The Winter Preparation of the Garden." The present officers were reëlected for 1910.



The poultry show of the Henry F. Michell Co., held at 518 last week, brought out 600 birds and on the closing day a crowd estimated at 2,000 passed under the electric arches erected for the occasion.

An able judge of cut flowers earnestly advises the growers to come into the market and look over their stock when it is offered for sale before they decide on the prices that should be realized at the holidays.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Business so far this month has not been any too good. The weather last week was bad under foot, and this had a good deal to do with slow trade. With the holidays close at hand, the trade is bound to pick up greatly, with all kinds of work. A good deal of funeral work was reported for last week, but outside of this, nothing much was made up. Most of us are now busy making up holiday goods. Our wholesalers have had plenty of everything, but most of them think that stock of all kinds will be scarce for Christmas and prices high.

California violets have been scarce and are up to $1 per hundred for the best. Roses and carnations have been enough for the demand, at no advance in price. Paper Whites and Romans are coming in fine and will be in plenty. Shipping trade is looking up and quite a lot of orders have been placed for Christmas. In greens, asparagus and smilax are in good demand.

Club Meeting.

The Florists' Club held its regular monthly meeting Thursday afternoon, December 9, in Odd Fellows' building. The meeting was again largely attended, there being thirty-one members present. There was also a nice exhibition of carnation blooms staged. The Chicago Carnation Co., Joliet, Ill., sent Sangamo, Mary Tolman and Conquest. The Miami Floral Co., Dayton, O., sent a vase of Miami Queen. The Charles Knopf Floral Co., Richmond, Ind., staged a vase of the fine new pink, Admiration.

President George B. Windler and all the other officers were present. G. M. Grossart, of Belleville, was elected to membership by a full vote, and W. A. Rowe, grower at Kirkwood, made application for membership. The chair appointed J. F. Ammann, F. J. Fillmore and E. W. Guy as judges on the carnations staged. A recess was taken, after which the judges made the following report: Admiration, an improved pink shade on Enchantress; Miami Queen, fine dark pink, an improvement on Lawson; Sangamo, fine medium pink color, stem

C. De Wever was then called upon to read his paper on "Advertising Through Our Florists' Club," which was followed by a discussion in which all the members took part. The paper was handed over to a committee of two, C. De Wever and J. J. Beneke, to report on it at the next meeting. The chair requested Frank J. Fillmore to read a paper at the next meeting on "The Troubles of a Grower."

A vote of thanks was extended to the carnation growers who exhibited blooms, and to Mr. De Wever for his able paper, also to the management of the poultry show for their kind invitation to attend the show in a body. After the meeting adjourned, all members were taken in hand by W. C. Smith and taken to view the poultry show at the Coliseum. The next meeting of the club takes place Thursday afternoon, January 13.

J. F. Ammann and Henry Blixen, of Edwardsville; John Connon, of Webster Groves; E. W. Guy, of Belleville; F. Vennemann, W. A. Rowe, W. J. Pilcher and Edwin Denker were our suburban members who attended the meeting. Ex-President H. C. Irish, superintendent of the Missouri Botanic Garden, also attended.

Various Notes.

W. C. Young and Alexander Waldbart were appointed by the court as appraisers of the stock of the Michel Plant & Bulb Co., who filed a petition in bankruptcy some time ago. The ground upon which the Michel Plant & Bulb Co. is located is the property of the Henry Shaw estate and the lease has seven more years to run. The Michel property will no doubt be sold in bulk and the buyer can retain the seven-year lease.

William C. Young is contemplating a trip to New Orleans soon after Christmas. Mr. Young says he never has been that far south. Our old friend, Harry Papworth, will take care of him on his arrival.

Miss May Burns, late with Kahrs Floral Co., is now with Grimm & Gorley on Washington avenue. Miss Burns will be a good help to the cut flower department.

The H. J. Weber & Sons Nursery Co., Sanders Nurseries and Emil Rothenheber had a busy fall season. The zero weather last week put a stop to their work.

The florists in the west end who have show-houses are offering some exceptionally fine, seasonable decorative and blooming plants for the holidays. Among those who are well supplied are: Mrs. Ayers, George Waldbart, Fred C. Weber, F. H. Weber, Ellison Floral Co., J. F. Windt, Sanders Nurseries and Kalisch Bros. Floral Co.

Bouquet green is extremely scarce here this year. The Third street commission men say there are only a few crates to be had and hold them at $15 per hundred pounds. Holly is plentiful at $4 to $5 per case.

C. Young & Sons Co. are showing a fine lot of poinsettias in pans, also other fine blooming plants.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

The Market.

Business last week was good, funeral demands continuing brisk, and the outlook for Christmas is bright. Already wreaths of holly, well berried, evergreens, laurel and box are seen on all sides, and plants are putting in an appearance. There is an unusually brisk demand for red immortelles. Roses are bringing from 2 cents to 15 cents; carnations, 2 cents to 3 cents, and violets 50 cents to $1 per hundred. Chrysanthemums are about done for, though some few are still coming in and meet with ready sale. Violets stiffened in price 25 cents per hundred, wholesale, last week.

Various Notes.

Frank A. Budlong and J. J. Budlong are enjoying an automobile and yachting trip in Florida.

The annual meeting of the Newport Horticultural Society is down for December 14. Efforts are being made to celebrate the twentieth anniversary of the society with a dinner in January.

Willie Greene, of H. Bayersdorfer & Co., Philadelphia, was in this city December 11.

Miss Fritz has accepted a position as bookkeeper with Johnston Bros.

Eugene McCarren had a pretty wedding decoration last week, red and green being the color effect. More than 500 Beacon carnations, with ferns and asparagus, were used.

Thomas J. Johnston & Co., Edward Brooks, manager, are being driven with funeral, reception and wedding work.

The Peirce brothers, of Waltham, Mass., called upon several of the florists in this city December 10. They made the trip to Providence and back in their automobile.

Arthur Zirkman was in this city December 11, in the interests of Rice & Co., Philadelphia.

Chrysanthemum

By Arthur Herrington

Formerly president Chrysanthemum Society of America.

The most complete and comprehensive work on the cultivation of the chrysanthemum that has yet been published in America. Its scope and character may be gleaned from the list of contents, which comprises chapters on composts; planting; benches, boxes or pots; general cultural details; crown and terminal buds; feeding, its object and application; care of the buds; exhibition and judging; specimen plants, plants in pots; raising from seed and hybridizing; sports; hardy chrysanthemums; chrysantnemums for south and west; insect pests and diseases; classification and selection of varieties for special purposes; history of the chrysanthemum, etc. The book will be welcomed for the lucid, comprehensive, as well as the practical character of its contents. Handsomely illustrated. 168 pages, 5x7 inches. Price 50c postpaid.

Cucumbers, 60c to $1 doz.; lettuce, 50c to $1 strap; mint, 40c to 60c doz. bunches; mushrooms, 25c to 55c lb.; radishes, $1.50 to $2.25 hundred bunches; tomatoes, 8c to 18c lb.

CYANIDE IN SMALL HOUSE.

In fumigating with hydrocyanic acid gas, what formula should be used in a house 17x40 feet, to rid it of the white fly? The house is partly planted with cucumbers and partly with tomatoes, and is badly infested with the white fly.

J. R. P.

Try one jar with a 2-ounce dose of cyanide, dropped into a pint of water and about the same amount of sulphuric acid. If the dose were divided and placed in two jars, it might distribute better. I think that amount will kill all the white fly. If it does not, increase it to three ounces, placed in two jars, an ounce and a half to a jar, and try again. The insects are easily killed, but there is some danger of injury to the plants if the gas is made stronger than necessary, or if the plants are wet. The plants must be dry and the temperature should be about 60 degrees, for best results.

H. G.

APHIS ON LETTUCE.

Please tell me whether nicotine solution for spraying would be all right to use for aphis on lettuce.

E. O. E.

Yes, the nicotine solution will kill all the aphis that it strikes, without injury to the plants, but it might possibly taste or smell when the lettuce is served on the table. For that reason, spraying for insects on lettuce is not advisable. There is also another reason, and that is, that most of the insects are under the crinkly leaves and are so protected that spraying is not likely to strike a majority of them. In spraying for sucking insects, only those that are struck by the spray are killed. The moment spraying is over the benefit of the spray is over also, and it might be washed off with water from the hose.

H. G.

SPRAYING FOR APHIS.

I am writing to you on recommendation of the Leonard Seed Co., for information regarding the best method of dealing with those little green lettuce lice in a hothouse. Is there any other method of destroying them besides smoking with tobacco stems? It is not very convenient to smoke my house. Is there anything that can be sprayed on the lettuce that will destroy the bugs and not hurt the lettuce? For instance, I have some lettuce in outside beds that cannot be smoked and is covered with bugs. I should be thankful for any information on the subject.

G. J. H.

Any and all insects can be kept in check by using a swift, fine spray on the plants from the hose. It knocks them from the leaves, drowns many of them and keeps the others from breeding, if done frequently. This is probably the only way to get any relief on beds which you cannot fumigate.

If you are dissatisfied with the tobacco stems for fumigating in the greenhouse, try some of the aphis punk fumigating papers. They are excellent for aphis.

H. G.

LETTUCE IN SIX WEEKS.

In the REVIEW some weeks ago I read something about forcing lettuce so as to cut it in six weeks from the time the young plants were set out. I should like to ask how it is done and what the name of the variety is.

F. H. B.

Grand Rapids forcing lettuce is the most popular variety of leaf lettuce and is grown exclusively by a majority of the leaf lettuce growers. It can be marketed in six weeks from the date of transplanting into the benches, but usually takes a week or so longer in winter. The length of time is uncertain, depending upon temperature, time of year, size of plants, when set out, or other points in their care.

The seed should be planted in flats and transplanted as soon as up, placing them about two inches apart in the flats or on the bench. In about three weeks they will make nice plants to transplant into the benches. The temperature should be about 45 degrees at night and may run 15 degrees higher on bright days.

H. G.

JAMAICA PLAIN, MASS.

The Jamaica Plain Flower Store began business just fifteen years ago, December 10. The venture was made by the present proprietor, L. C. Margot, with his cousin, Adolphe Piguet, who then operated greenhouses in West Roxbury. Half of the shop on Elm street, adjoining Marshall's livery stable, served as store for a few weeks, when it became necessary to remove to a more practical location, this being to the store on Seaverns avenue, now occupied by the Clark Dry Goods Co. The partnership with Mr. Piguet was dissolved in about two years, he having been offered a position in the Harvard Museum of Botany, and therefore the business has been developed to its present condition by Mr. Margot. At the end of a five years' lease of the Seaverns avenue store, the Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., J. C. Robinson, Waterloo, Neb.; First Vice-pres., M. H. Duryea, New York; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O.

WALDO ROHNERT, Gilroy, Cal., finds it necessary to abandon the eastern trip he had planned. He is this season increasing his acreage in seed crops from 800 to 1,000 acres.

JAMES VICK'S SONS have a new pink aster, which has been given the name Rochester, and which the Chamber of Commerce there has adopted as the official flower of the city.

AT the annual meeting of the Rhode Island Grange Society, last week, it was voted to ask the general assembly to enact a law to provide for an inspection of all seed that is sold for horticultural and agricultural purposes in that state.

MOST of the big seed houses will this season avail themselves of the privilege of mailing their catalogues prepaid in cash without stamps. The post-office regulations have now been so simplified and have become so well understood that a considerable saving is made to anyone mailing large quantities of identical pieces.

THE first of the eastern general seed catalogues for 1910 to reach the REVIEW was that of the Livingston Seed Co., Columbus, O., which came to hand December 12—an advance copy—with which was enclosed the special catalogue for market gardeners. The general catalogue celebrates the sixtieth anniversary of the house and it is natural that a specially fine book should have been issued. The embossed lithograph cover of course carries a tomato, with the Ohio Sugar muskmelon on the back. The prices are of course a matter of interest. Peas of the popular sorts are from $2 to $2.75 per peck; beans from 40 cents to 60 cents per quart, with most of the largest sellers at 50 cents; Crosby's Egyptian beet, 75 cents per pound.

THE price of bouquet green in the west this year is governed entirely by the exigencies confronting the buyer.

THE scientific side of seed growing is receiving constantly increasing attention the world over, but the venerable house of Vilmorin-Andrieux & Co., Paris, is easily the leader in this respect and its work is coming to be recognized far and wide as of large importance to the industry of agriculture.

A BREACH of warranty case in Ireland recently was decided for the defendant, the Irish Wholesale Agricultural Society, on the ground that "a good or bad crop depended very much on the way the seed was sown, the soil, the climate and other matters beyond the control of the suppliers of the seed."

THE Aggeler & Musser Seed Co., Los Angeles, Cal., has sent the REVIEW an advance copy of its 1910 catalogue, now ready for mailing. The book shows progress. It carries lithographed covers, White Seeded Kentucky Wonder bean on the front and First Early tomato on the back, and contains 144 pages.

THERE still are some small surpluses of Dutch bulbs in the east.

DUTCH-BULB salesmen have become numerous in the west; they are coming earlier every year.

IF there is not a big business in gladiolus bulbs next spring, a number of people will meet with financial disappointment—but there is little danger of that.

THE U. S. Department of Agriculture issued, December 4, a bulletin on "The Deterioration of Corn in Storage" that will be of interest to seedsmen. It is by J. W. T. Duvel.

IN England all the conditions of "service" are closely prescribed by law. A new regulation limiting the hours of employment is held to apply to seedsmen's assistants and is causing alarm as being likely to seriously hamper the seed trade during the busy season.

W. W. BARNARD Co., Chicago, who annually make a leading specialty of Christmas greens in a wholesale way, are enjoying an extremely successful year with that highly speculative commodity, bouquet green. Acting on their belief that this was to be a year of shortage,

THE general catalogue of the Holmes Seed Co., Harrisburg, Pa., is in the mails.

VISITED BOSTON: James Comont, representing James Carter & Co., London, England.

ARTHUR T. BODDINGTON, the New York seedsman, has closed his summer residence at Yonkers and returned to his Brooklyn home for the winter.

THE W. E. Kirchhoff Co., at Penbroke, N. Y., not only make a specialty of growing gladiolus bulbs for the trade, but are large shippers of florists' peat.

THE prices for produce are somewhat better than they were. This has a tendency to make the truck gardener more satisfied, and it will have a good effect on his spring seed order if it keeps up through January.

VISITED CHICAGO: W. H. Grennel, East Saginaw, Mich.; Mel. L. Webster, Independence, Ia.; L. M. Kimberlin, of Kimberlin Seed Co., Santa Clara, Cal. W. J. Fosgate and Chas. P. Braslan are expected to arrive shortly.

THE December onion set shipments are now going forward. It is reported that some of the stock is not keeping so well as was expected. The loss from this cause will have quite a bearing upon the value of sets when the spring demand begins.

TRADE conditions in general are reported good. Orders are more plentiful than the stock to fill them. The wholesalers are busy, some of them finding night work necessary to keep up. The catalogue men are expecting a good trade and are ready for it.

IT is interesting to note that the U. S. Department of Agriculture is watching the importations of grass seeds and grass seed adulterants, through the two-ounce samples gathered at the custom houses, and is following up their distribution after importation.

PUTTING finishing touches on the catalogues, the holly and green business, and the anxiety to get from the growers all that is coming to them on the pro rata basis, keeps many of the seedsmen from revising the list of those to whom they will give Christmas presents.

THE specific duties on seeds seems to give a great deal better satisfaction to the seedsmen than the old plan. We do not hear so many complaints about the time it takes to get import shipments through the customs house.

THE shipments from Europe are farther behind hand than ever. Reasons given are that the weather has been unfavorable since harvest time, causing delay in threshing and cleaning. The varieties that the American seedsmen depend upon European growers for are so important that this unusual delay causes much inconvenience.

ALL the California growers' representatives on eastern trips report conditions on the coast quite favorable, when they left there, for seasonable operations, and the outlook is said to be very encouraging for getting everything in shape for a good harvest in 1910.

IMPORTS.

The imports of seeds through the port of New York for the week ending December 4 were as follows:

have prices too low, especially on the popular varieties of wax sorts, as the deliveries are falling much below estimates.

Cucumbers and muskmelons should be higher than last year, although the trade in general seems inclined to hold close to last year's prices for the retail catalogue.

Golden Self Blanching celery is one item that must go up. Onion seed, it is thought, should stand at last year's prices. Beets, radish and all root crops would stand for an advance. Sweet corn is worth as much or more. Peas of all varieties and pole beans are shorter than they were reported at this time last year. The dwarf limas are as scarce and judging from reports gathered from reliable sources nothing in garden seeds need be priced low.

LILY BULBS.

A suit, the outcome of which will be watched with interest by the trade because of the fact that everyone dealing in seeds and bulbs is exposed to the same danger, has been instituted by Eugene N. Foss against Herbert W. Rawson and Sarah E. Rawson, executors of the estate of W. W. Rawson. The action is in the Superior Court at Boston and the bill filed in connection therewith sets up a claim for damages in the sum of $10,000 as the result of the alleged failure of a crop of lilies forced for Easter, 1908.

Eugene N. Foss is proprietor of the Rosemere Conservatories, at Dorchester, of which David Ring is superintendent. In his bill of complaint Mr. Foss says that in 1907 he bought 9,200 lily bulbs from the late Mr. Rawson—4,100 of them

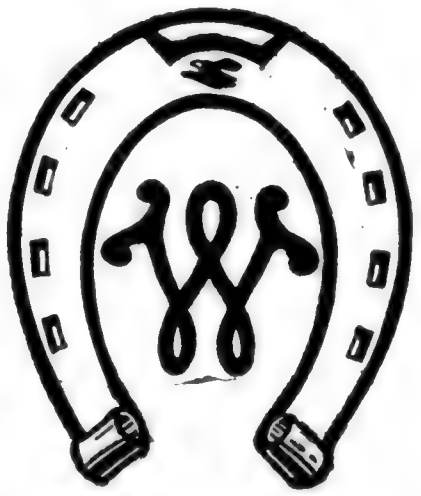
Horseshoe Brand Products

This country is the richest in the world. The wealth is not in Wall Street either—it is from the soil. Our products this year are worth nearly nine billion dollars. If the market value of our crops this year had to be paid for in spot cash in one transaction, the world's known stock of gold would fall one billion dollars short of footing the bill. The corn crop, valued at $1,720,000,000, has been grown in about 120 days, or at the rate of about $15,000,000 a day. The cotton crop in the south will be worth twice as much as the entire gold output of the world this year. The mills in the south are consuming nearly one-quarter of this cotton. It was only thirty years ago when they began spinning. We are progressing every year. The value of our crops has almost doubled in ten years.

Are you progressing with the times? Are you increasing your sales? We are, and you will too if you can produce the goods. Buy the very best in bulbs and sell at a profit. Good flowers always sell before poor ones, no matter what the price may be. Great care should be used, especially in buying Lily Bulbs. Buy selected goods; good, clean, well cured bulbs. For next Easter (April 16, 1911), we recommend Horseshoe Brand Giganteum. These bulbs are the cream of the crop; raised from only the healthiest seed bulbs; well ripened before they are harvested, and every case will be carefully inspected before shipment. We know from what field every case of bulbs comes; a most complete record being carefully kept.



Ask any grower of Horseshoe Brand Giganteum what his opinion is. We don't ask you to take our word for it. Write us.

were of the variety Lilium longiflorum multiflorum, and 5,100 were invoiced as Lilium longiflorum giganteum. Mr. Foss bought them for forcing for the Easter market of 1908, he says, and claims the seller was fully informed as to what he intended them for. He avers that he planted the bulbs and gave them every care, spending considerable money, but alleges the bulbs proved to be untrue and the crop a failure. He asks recompense for his loss of possible profits.

This appears to be another of those cases which will afford a test of the non-warranty now generally employed.

Berlin, N. Y.....1910

For forcing I can recommend it as being almost equal to the best named varieties generally used for that purpose.

It contains named novelties of merit, and hybrids bred especially to supply the needs of Florists requiring light colors.

Having for many years experimented extensively to the end of supplying a White and Light Mixture especially adapted to the Florists' trade, for Funeral and Decorative work where light colors alone would be appropriate, I am now prepared to furnish my Meadowvale Florists' Light Mixture, which I can guarantee to contain the best quality obtainable in the world at the price. There is such a variation in Florists' Mixtures, as generally offered, that I do not wonder at the frequent disgust of the purchaser, and in my preparation of this stock I have endeavored to eliminate every variety with which the most critical florist could find fault, annually adding desirable varieties and roguing each year more closely.

This Mixture was first offered by me in 1906 since which time I have been unable to supply the demand. I have, however, this year a good stock and invite a trial from those not acquainted with, and increased orders from those who know its merits. For this season, 1910, it will be sold only by me and in lots of not less than 1,000 or more. Price, $15.00 per 1,000, F. O. B. Berlin, N. Y., cash with order, and will be sold subject to the conditions on above order blank.

This offer will hold good as long as the stock lasts and orders will be entered in their turn, although shipment may not be required until later. When the stock is all sold, this offer will be withdrawn, without further notice, therefore do not delay and miss it. May I not have the opportunity of demonstrating that I have a Mixture which, after growing one season, you would not part with for double the price paid? If so, fill out the order blank and send to me with remittance and I will sign and return duplicate to you.

Illustrated Catalogue of Other Collections, Mixtures and Named Varieties will be Mailed upon Application.

SUDDEN COLD IN DENMARK.

Hjalmar Hartmann & Co., the Danish seed growers, who do a large export trade to America, write the REVIEW that "on the night between November 12 and 13 we have had a snowstorm of such an extent that according to the meteorological observation it was unsurpassed in twenty years, and there has been a large desolation in the telegraph and telephone lines, so that we in three days were not even able to wire to the United States. After the storm we have had severe frosts, and many cabbages and other vegetables intended for the market were entirely spoiled, as the strong winter came so suddenly that preparation was not made to cover the stock. This means a large loss to the inhabitants of Amager, who are growing all kinds of vegetables for the Copenhagen market and for export to Russia, Finland and Germany; also considerable lots of cabbage intended for seeds for the American trade were defected by frosts. However, we succeeded in getting the most part of our cabbage planted before the frosts, taking experience of the early frosts in

Forcing Gladiolus

Many florists plant these in boxes, or among their carnations, in the winter. They are excellent for decorative purposes and realize good prices, either wholesale or retail. Gladiolus are a good catch crop and take up but little room. The following are the best for this purpose.

The Best White Aster

We have grown all the best Asters and have given them full consideration. In making this statement, it is not only our opinion, but the verdict of those who last season tested it.

Smith's Peerless

READ WHAT THEY SAY

Smith's Peerless gave perfect satisfaction and were the prettiest and largest I have ever seen.—EDWARD LAMBERT, Maryland.

Your Peerless Asters, to my knowledge, were the best white among seven of the so-called best varieties.—W. D. HERRICK, Illinois.

The Peerless is the best white on the place. Am saving them all for seed. I know a good thing when I see it.—J. W. SHRADER, Illinois.

All I can say is I grew 9 varieties and Smith's Peerless came best of all. Every plant gave me perfect blooms.—JOHN BLAGYS, Connecticut.

Smith's Peerless was the best on my grounds. Alongside of Conway's, Vick's and Dreer's white, it was and had more perfect flowers.—JOHN D. GRIGOR, Ohio.

Will say Smith's Peerless is the best Aster I ever saw, and they did fine with me and were the admiration of every one who saw them.—C. H. ESTEY, Massachusetts.

Smith's Peerless Asters have done remarkably well. They are full of beautiful blooms now and are certainly named rightly—Peerless.—MRS. J. W. SPANGENBERG, Michigan.

Your Peerless Aster gave us some extra fine flowers; in fact, the best we had. We planted the different branching Asters sent out by the various growers.—DAVID GROFF, Maryland.

Will say Smith's Peerless is the best white Aster I ever saw. Some specimens were particularly fine and I shall plant no other kind for white hereafter.—J. A. MERIWEATHER, Illinois.

Smith's Peerless was especially fine and, while not quite as large as some of Crego's white, they had a quality which the latter lacked—a more perfect, full center and stiffer stem.—DR. A. B. PRICE, Indiana.

I am glad to report that Smith's Peerless was most satisfactory. Have usually imported my Aster seed from Germany, but yours excel them in every way. Strong, vigorous plants, with large blooms.—THOS. JONES, Oregon.

The Smith's Peerless Asters from seed purchased from you last spring have done exceedingly well for us this season. We consider it the best of a number of varieties we have in our garden. It produced long, thrifty stems.—P. C. BRADLEY, Michigan.

Your Smith's Peerless did very well with us. I consider it the best white we ever grew. A fine shaped, very double flower with long, stiff stems, many of them 3 feet. A good keeper. All of our Asters are grown under glass.—FRED H. WILSHIRE, New York.

Out of the forty plants of Smith's Peerless from the small packet there was not one flower that was single. Every flower was very double, pure white and of immense size, with good long stems. It was easy to distinguish the difference between this and Carlson's white growing near.—JAMES SKINNER, New York.

The foregoing is a partial list of testimonials. It is unquestionably the most double White Aster known. In most soils the stems are long and unusually strong. Large size, form perfect, and pure white. Per oz., $8.00; ¼ oz., $2.50; 1-16 oz., 75c; trade packet, 15 grains, approximately 450 seeds, 50c. We have other Aster seeds in standard kinds at moderate prices. Our Mums require no introduction, everybody grows them.

I mistake not we have returned to coal. tificates according to merit. No awards or certificates will be granted to sweet peas unless they are sent for trial at Guildford. For these trials the varieties will be accepted only from the raiser or introducer, and a small charge for each variety will be made. Novelties will be received under number, although names are much preferred. Any variety meriting an award must, if under number, be named before such award can be granted.

At the request of numerous seedsmen, the committee will conduct a further and distinct trial solely for the purpose of testing correctness and purity of stocks of sweet peas. A charge of 5 shillings per variety or stock sent for trial will be made. Sweet peas for these trials must reach C. Foster, Ladygrove Farm, near New Guildford, not later than January 15, 1910. For the novelty trials not less than fifteen seeds should be sent, and for the purity trials, not less than two dozen seeds of each variety or stock.

PACIFIC COAST.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

The Market.

Except for funeral work, business would be rather dull. Stock of nearly everything but violets and roses is scarce. The hard frost of last week injured carnations and chrysanthemums especially. Poinsettias also suffered, many of them losing all their leaves. In sheltered situations there are some good ones, which are coloring finely.

Greenhouse carnations are in short crop, only a few coming in at present. The best bring $1 a dozen. Chrysanthemums are near their finish, although some good ones are still seen in the stores. Some fine azaleas, spiræas and cyclamens have made their appearance.

The funeral of five members of one family, who were killed in an automobile accident at a railway crossing, called for a great quantity and variety of designs. There were so many, in fact, that it was impossible to take them all into the church, and many of them were delivered directly to the cemetery.

Various Notes.

Morris Goldenson has been showing some fine English holly from British Columbia. He considers himself fortunate in securing a quantity of excellent carnations this week. He lost several hundred chrysanthemums by the frost.

The Redondo Floral Co. has an attractive and seasonable window, filled with araucarias and ferns and gay with Christmas ribbons. The whole store has taken on a festive look.

The Angelus has been displaying some fine poinsettias, which bring from $3 to $4 per dozen.

The Rosery, the new store of the Roth-Reymond-Muller Floral Co., was formally opened on Tuesday of last week. There was a large attendance. Potted maidenhair ferns were given as souvenirs. It is one of the handsomest, lightest and best appointed stores in the city. A fern arbor, where all the potted plants are displayed, is one of the features.

S. A. C.

PORTLAND, ORE.

The Market.

Business conditions for the last two or three weeks have been exceptionally brisk. Thanksgiving day passed off quietly, but with general satisfaction on all sides, as business showed an increase of twenty-five per cent over former years. Yellow mums, in particular, were more in demand, on account of the football meet. Prices in mums ranged from $2 to $7 per dozen. Carnations were scarce and many dealers stopped booking orders the day previous. In fact, there was a general, all-round clean-up.

The continued rainy season of several weeks' duration has shortened the crop of flowers of all varieties. Roses are in normal supply, with the demand lively. There is a general complaint that violets are still a scarce commodity. Cyclamens, primroses and Garza mums about constitute the flowering plants. Fern dishes and table ferns meet with an increasing demand and are never in oversupply.

The outlook for Christmas is promising in regard to plants. Poinsettias are in fine shape and are showing fine color. Extra efforts are being made to bring the azaleas and general stock into proper shape. Green goods are extremely scarce, especially asparagus. Oregon grape, a local wild green, is highly satisfactory, quite decorative and most beautiful in color. It is similar to the well-known Mahonia leaves. Magnolia leaves for funeral arrangements are often in demand and are often handy for the florist when flowers are scarce.

Various Notes.

C. F. Kipp, of Spokane, spent a few days in the city. He expressed satisfaction with Thanksgiving business, saying that it showed a considerable increase.

Crout & Wilson, of Olney, Ill., have bought the range of F. J. Broetje, at Mount Tabor, and will continue the business, with a choice line of cut flowers and plants.

George Spencer, for many years foreman for Martin & Forbes, has resigned and will try his luck in Australia.

George Betz, Sr., has leased his glass, near Oregon City, to C. M. Weintz, and will retire from the worries of business.

Wedding bells were ringing in the home of Sam Roake on a recent Sunday. Miss Winnie Roake and George Gardner were the participating parties.

E. R. C.

OLYMPIA, WASH.

An unseasonably heavy frost made its appearance here before Thanksgiving and made business dull. Previous to this, field-grown roses, dahlias and peonies had furnished a fine crop of blooms and found a ready market, as greenhouse stock had not advanced enough to supply the demand.

E. J. Berneche, who has won several honors for dahlias, roses and peonies, has one of the largest and finest collections on the Pacific coast and will be in a position to supply large quantities of dahlias next spring. He won a silver medal at the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

We have been treated to a succession of showers for the last week, which certainly dampened the atmosphere, as well as the ardor of the flower buying public. Everyone appears to be saving money for the Christmas purchases, and the inclement weather, together with the apparent antipathy of the people to spending money for floral products, has made an exceptionally dull week. The excess of dark weather has also caused quite a scarcity of flowers. It is seldom that the first week in December brings such a quantity of dark, cloudy weather and a consequence of few carnations and roses. The former are at a premium. No American Beauties of the fancy type are being brought into town, and of second quality stock there is only a slight scattering. Maids and Brides are more in evidence. Strictly first quality stock costs the retailers from 75 cents to $1 per dozen, but of shorter stemmed stock there is a fair supply. A few Liberties and Testouts are seen and they cost the stores from 50 cents to 75 cents per dozen. With carnations there is a slighter change in price than might be expected at this time, although the quality is not quite up to the standard. Fair supplies of Enchantress and some of the lighter sorts are being brought into town, but there is a great scarcity in the fancy stock. Poinsettias, from present indications, will not be in oversupply during the holidays. Advices from the south, for outside grown stock, would seem to indicate that there will be a great scarcity of good blooms. For well grown plants in 7-inch pans and pots the wholesalers are asking $1 each, and from this price down to 50 cents each for smaller stock seems to be about what will be charged. Valley is plentiful, and according to reports from the growers there will be plenty for the holidays. Red berries are plentiful and the price has stiffened, since Thanksgiving, to $50 per ton.

Various Notes.

H. Hayashi, of Alameda, has opened a new store on Santa Clara avenue, near Park street, in that town.

The Piedmont Floral & Seed Co. is now located on Eleventh street near Washington street, Oakland.

There seems to be considerable hesitancy among the retailers about handling British Columbia holly. The claim is made that it has not proven to be a well paying proposition during the last two seasons.

The May Seed Co. reports a heavy trade in nursery stock, owing to the early opening of the planting season.

G. V. Bennett, of Dimond, Cal., is in line with several houses of ferns and poinsettias. His stock looks remarkably well.

Thos. F. Sharpe is on a visit to Portland, Ore., and vicinity.

The Christmas tree men are in town in full force. Many of the stores will handle trees as a side issue. G.

REVIVING POT-GROWN STOCK.

What is the grower to do with azaleas, camellias and rhododendrons that have been overwatered or underwatered in a florist's store and are returned when the blooms have fallen? This is always a puzzling proposition, especially when they were originally flowered by some other grower. Many times the plants have been overforced, in which case they might as well be thrown out completely. In a majority of cases, however, with a little extra attention they can be brought back into good condition and put in shape so that they will make salable plants for the next season again.

In the mild climate of California we have splendid success with this class of stock, when planted in the open ground and given plenty of water and a partially shady situation. They are not liable to bloom so freely for the first couple of seasons, however, when this is done. So, if it is desired to force them again, this procedure should be dispensed with.

When a camellia has been overwatered and is in a sickly condition, or when it has been given too little water, which is usually the case, by all means take it out of the pot and plant it in the open ground. Camellias want a great deal of water and fertilizing, and I have seen the most miserable looking, misused pot-grown stock that it is possible to imagine make splendid, shapely plants in two seasons when planted out. They are easily transplanted again, as they make but small roots and do well when given proper treatment in pots. If the plants are in good condition, merely plunging the pot in soil is all that is necessary to have them salable for the second season, in which condition they will make plenty of flower buds.

With azaleas, when they have been overwatered or dried out so much that they are not in a healthy condition, the best plan is to cut them back somewhat and plant them in the ground in a rather shady situation. See that they have good drainage and give them plenty of water and it will be quite a surprise to see what salable plants they will make a year later. If they are inclined to grow unevenly they can be pinched into shape and will set almost as many flower buds as if they were in pots.

If the azaleas have not been neglected and are received in good condition from the florist, the best way to handle them is as follows: If the weather is quite cold, keep them under glass after trimming them back somewhat, and about the first of the warm weather plunge the pots completely in an open bed, where they will get plenty of air, light and moisture. Keep the tops in shape by pinching them back and, if the pots are too full of roots when they are taken up in the fall, give them a larger size and shift under glass again. Azaleas do well in a lath house, but, although they make plenty of foliage, they will not set as many buds as when they are kept in the open.

With rhododendrons the best plan is not to try to flower them in pots a second season, but to plant them out in beds that are partially shaded. They do not stand trimming like azaleas and camellias, and although a season or two will be lost as far as flowers are concerned, they will make splendid specimens and can be taken up and boxed as soon as they show another set of buds. NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.
Officers for 1909-10: Pres., F. H. Stannard, Ottawa, Kan.; Vice-Pres., W. P. Stark, Louisiana, Mo.; Sec'y, John Hall, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. Thirty-fifth annual meeting, Denver, June, 1910.

IS there anyone in this country who grows Manetti stocks in a commercial way?

CALIFORNIA PRIVET appears to be one of the few items that are hanging fire on nurserymen's hands.

P. J. REGAN, formerly in the nursery business at Iowa City, Ia., has been adjudged a bankrupt. According to his own estimate, his liabilities are $25,000 and his assets $18,000.

THE weather of last week about put an end to the fall season in the nursery business in the east. The conditions this autumn have been exceptionally favorable. Not in years has there been so long a planting season.

PICEA PUNGENS GLAUCA.

Picea pungens glauca is one of the most popular of all evergreens, both here and in Europe. It is a mistake to plant a number of plants in a limited space, as is too often done. One perfect specimen, as here illustrated, is far better than a crowded group, none of which have a chance to show their individuality. Few people realize, when planting either evergreens or deciduous trees, to what dimensions they will ultimately reach. For this reason we see far too often on public streets, as well as in parkways and private estates, the distressing effects of overcrowding. If planters would use fewer trees and provide for these more liberally in the way of compost, we would see better results all around. The craze for mass, planting for immediate effect, and neglect to properly thin in season must be held responsible for many ill-shaped trees.

It is useless to plant the Colorado blue spruce unless it has room to show itself, and if the hole has been carefully prepared and is of ample size, the rapidity of growth will surprise most people. The illustration shows a fine specimen on the grounds of Arthur Whitin, Whitinsville, Mass., where Thomas Howden is the efficient manager. W. N. C.

BERBERIS SILVER BEAUTY.

Some weeks ago the REVIEW recorded the fact that M. J. Van Leeuwen, manager of the Continental Nurseries, Franklin, Mass., had registered Berberis Thunbergii Silver Beauty with the Society of American Florists, describing it as a variegated form of the well-known Berberis Thunbergii. Mr. Van Leeuwen writes that "good news is ever welcome and oft repeated, and thus travels fast. So the origination of a variegated berberry and its subsequent registration, noticed in your columns, has already attracted the attention of many of the growers of ornamental nursery stock, both in this country and in Europe, resulting in a demand for stock far in excess of the present supply, with a number of offers to purchase the entire stock. It is the intention to exhibit Berberis Silver Beauty next summer, for which purpose a number of pot plants are being grown."

ANDORRA NURSERIES,
Wm. Warner Harper, Prop.
Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia, Pa.

provision in paragraph 560: "Fruit-plants, tropical and semitropical, for the purpose of propagation or cultivation." The U. S. Board of General Appraisers sustained the protest of the importer, General Appraiser Waite writing the following opinion:

"The question at issue seems to be whether these plants are tropical or semitropical fruit plants imported for propagation. From the testimony we gather that the Citrus trifoliata is a kind of wild orange tree, which is grown from the seed and which produces a small, inedible orange; that the plants are sometimes used for hedges, but the principal purpose for which they are imported is to use as stock upon which to graft an edible variety of orange. Such seedlings are described in the Japanese catalogue in evidence as 'useful hedge plants with thorny branches, much valued as stock for grafting orange families.' We think these plants should be considered of a semitropical nature. They are imported for growth and cultivation in the southern part of Texas. The Board in G. A. 4255 (T. D. 20009) held seedling orange trees of the Mandarin variety, imported for cultivation in Louisiana, to be free of duty under paragraph 560 as semitropical fruit plants. The Citrus trifoliata plants are shown by the testimony to be fruit plants, though their natural fruit is not considered edible; but as the plants are used as stock upon which to graft the edible varieties of oranges, and grafting is merely one method of propagating plants, we are of the opinion that they come within the descriptive terms of paragraph 560, and are entitled to free entry thereunder."

Insects and Insecticides.
By CLARENCE M. WEED, D. Sc. A practical manual concerning noxious insects and the methods of preventing their injuries. Profusely illustrated. A generally useful handbook on noxious insects. It covers the whole field of insect pests very thoroughly and is especially valuable for its complete and up-to-date methods of fighting insects. The work is intensely practical. All the important insect pests are described and remedies for them, and methods of preventing their injuries described in detail. Cloth. $1.50

Greenhouse Management.
By PROF. L. R. TAFT, of Michigan Agricultural College. A manual for florists and flower lovers on the forcing of flowers, vegetables and fruits in greenhouses, and the propagation and care of house plants. It treats of all the plants commonly cultivated by florists and amateurs, and explains in a thorough manner the methods that have been found most successful in growing them. Particular attention is paid to the growing of cut flowers, the growing of fruits under glass, etc. Of special value will be the directions for treating plants when attacked by insects and fungi. The preparation of the soil, the use of various manures, composts and fertilizers, watering, ventilating and heating receive careful and minute attention. Cloth. 400 pages. $1.50

WAYSIDE NOTES.

Some men are born geniuses. J. S. Cunningham, at Cold Spring, N. Y., is one, being sexton, undertaker, landscape gardener and florist. No branch is neglected for the others; he says it is all in the business and dovetails one into the other. He has just finished a house 24x100 feet. This addition gives him quite a range of glass for carnations, which seem scarcer than usual at this time, though we have had plenty of sunlight. Growers claim that the plants have made softer growth and the holiday crops promise a lighter yield. Prices are up and appearances indicate a good call for plants, which are abundant.

Spy Hill Conservatories, at Fishkill-on-Hudson, N. Y., have a good call for Perle, which is still popular for funeral work. They find it a profitable rose to grow. Richmond and the Killarneys are doing well here. Prospects for holiday trade are good.

Frank E. Whitney, gardener to Winthrop Sargent, at Fishkill-on-Hudson, has, among a fine collection of plants, a large house of specimen orange trees and arranges to have the plants in full bearing in May, forming an orange grove outdoors—a unique and much admired idea. His autumn group at the Poughkeepsie show was admitted to be the handsomest ever set up. Among a batch of seedling carnations is a beautiful white—parentage, Enchantress x Prosperity—almost identical at present with C. W. Ward's grand white. Wood Bros. report a book full of orders for single and double violets for Christmas.

Newburgh, N. Y., will soon be quite a center of horticulture. New houses are going up, producing some of the finest stock in the Hudson valley. The Newburgh Floral Co. has adopted plans from Lord & Burnham for a show house and office. A sunken garden, with aquatic ponds, is to be a feature. Concrete and plate glass will be used in the construction of the houses. This section of the town bids fair to be the most aristocratic and Dr. Waite deserves much credit for his foresight in erecting so handsome a structure.

The Yuess Gardens Co., of Newburgh, has plans for a big addition to its plant, to be begun as soon as ground can be broken. The firm reports a good season, with orders in plenty for the holidays. Carnations are selling at $1 and $1.50 per dozen. The finest scarlets are Beacon and Prospector. The latter has a brilliant color and is the freest of all. The bloom is rather undersized, but the color and freedom of habit make it a profitable kind to grow to sell at retail. Bulb trade has been good and prospects for spring seeds are excellent. The cold storage plant is filled with lilies for summer delivery.

Valentine Burgevin's Sons, of Kingston, N. Y., introduce each year something new in decorative art and rightly attribute their success to keeping abreast of the times. This season combination baskets and ferneries of the choicest ware will be shown. Their customers need not go to the metropolis to see the best offered.

William Williams, on Broadway, Kingston, keeps up the reputation of this swell neighborhood and has a fine stock for holiday trade. M.

BED OF SHASTA PLANTED AUG. 1, PHOTOGRAPHED DEC. 1.

Last September a grower said this bed carried too many buds; that it could not keep up such a gait throughout the season. He did not know the variety. That he was mistaken is being proved by the record Shasta is making. Some time ago we showed you a photo taken Oct. 1. Now look at another one we had taken Dec. 1, and see whether it looks as though it were going off crop. You can come any time and you will always see it in full crop. We invite inspection any time.

We are booking orders right along now at $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

Club Meeting.

The Florists' Club held its regular meeting Monday evening, December 13, at the office of the Good & Reese Co., with President Roger Murphy in the chair.

Prior to calling the meeting to order an informal discussion was had on the subject of the great annoyance and frequent excessive overcharges in connection with importations of stock from Holland. From the foreign nursery to New York all sorts of expenses are accumulated and assessed in blanket form as "advanced charges," the aggregate of transportation charges, fees and duties seeming in many cases to be extortionate. Some united action in the matter is likely to follow.

A check system for use in connection with the delivering and receiving of plants between the various local growers was adopted, the preparation of the necessary blanks in triplicate being left with Roy McGregor, such a system having been in use for some time by the McGregor Bros. Co.

The project of holding a local flower show annually or oftener was discussed and some plan to this end will probably be adopted. It is thought that Springfield should take some advance step in this direction as a flower city and offer some prizes, such as would attract exhibitors from other towns.

The next meeting will be in charge of the local retail florists and some subject of interest to them will be selected by the program committee. G. D.

House of Carnation Mrs. C. W. Ward at Cottage Gardens, Photographed December 3, 1909

Important Announcement to Carnation Growers

At the earnest solicitation of a large number of commercial and private growers, the Cottage Gardens Company has decided to disseminate this year the two famous Carnations

two varieties which are well known to all the leading growers of the country. 4 years' test in the New York market has demonstrated their popularity and good staying qualities. For the past 3 years we have been growing from 15,000 to 25,000 of each, during which time they have always commanded the highest market prices, and at no time has the supply been equal to the demand.

On the exhibition table they have taken the highest honors, and we believe it is safe to say these two carnations stand without an equal.

INVITATION

We extend a cordial invitation to all those interested to visit our establishment, where they will have an opportunity to see them growing and compare their good points with other standard varieties grown under the same conditions.

MRS. C. W. WARD

MRS. C. W. WARD is a perfectly formed flower with full center; color, deep pink, several shades lighter than Lawson, deeper than Winsor; having strong, erect stems 24 to 36 inches in length. A vigorous, healthy grower and has never shown disease of any kind.

A very early and free bloomer, producing fine flowers as early as September 1st, which bring from 25 to 50 per cent more than any other variety on the market.

The keeping qualities of this variety are remarkable. Several shipments of blooms sent to Europe reached their destinations in perfect condition, and wherever exhibited it has always been the last to show signs of wilting.

ALMA WARD

This beautiful Carnation is pure white except during dark weather, when it shows delicate splashings of pink similar to the Cattleya Orchid, increasing its popularity.

ALMA WARD is the largest and most fragrant Carnation ever grown, producing perfect flowers, 3½ to 4½ inches in diameter, on strong, erect stems 36 to 42 inches in length.

This most remarkable variety takes the same place among Carnations as the American Beauty Rose among Roses, and has, during the past 4 years, been awarded numerous prizes, including the following:

The Lawson Silver Medal, ... Toronto, 1907
(No Gold Medal having been awarded.)
The Lawson Gold Medal, ... Washington, 1908

A SURPRISE

Was the superior quality of our Carnations in competition at the Chicago and Milwaukee Shows. To get good, vigorous plants that will produce quality, start right by getting good, healthy cuttings, grown under proper conditions and taken from strong, clean, healthy stock.

OUR WINNERS

are conceded to be the best paying varieties to grow at the present time.

TWO GREAT WHITES

WHITE PERFECTION. Full flower, immense size, prolific on long, stiff stem.
WHITE ENCHANTRESS. The true pure white stock, will be a leader for some time to come.

WINSOR. The best pink in its color for general use.
VICTORY and BEACON. Two great reds of equal merit.
LAWSON ENCHANTRESS. A great improvement on Lawson, larger flower and long stemmed.
ENCHANTRESS. Still the leader in its class.
ROSE-PINK ENCHANTRESS. We have the true stock.
AFTERGLOW. An easy grower and popular variety. Strong, well rooted cuttings of the above varieties. $3.00 per 100; $25.00 per 1000.
O. P BASSETT. The latest red placed on the market. Per 100, $6.00; per 1000, $50.00.
MRS. CHAS. KNOPF. A well colored Enchantress, grows freely on erect stem, a good acquisition. $6.00 per 100; $50.00 per 1000.

Place your orders with us and get select stock, carefully packed, and satisfactory returns for your investment.

C. C. Pollworth Co., Milwaukee

SOUTH ROYALSTON, MASS.

E. B. Hanson's model cucumber houses, three in number, are now completed and plants are being set out. The buildings are on an elevation, with nothing to obstruct the sun. The frames are of iron, with cement walls, and sufficiently wide to allow a team to be driven through the center to supply or remove the soil, and many modern conveniences have been adopted, among which are automatic alarm bells, connected by electricity with the residence of the proprietor, the superintendent and the boiler room, so that in case of the temperature of the houses rising or falling so as to endanger the plants, an alarm is sounded and the bells continue to ring until attention is called to the condition of the house. There is also a tell-tale as to the condition of the moisture in the air, and thermometers set in the beds show the temperature of the soil. Twenty-eight pipes, three inches in diameter, in each house, furnish heat; the total length would exceed three miles of pipes. Two of these houses are 30x 150 feet. The other is shorter, on account of being used as a propagating house early in the season; afterwards plants are transplanted and grown as in the other houses. The boiler house is 20x55 feet, with cement walls and floor, and contains a boiler of 100 horse-power for heating. Water is furnished from an artesian well 105 feet deep, which yields 20,000 gallons a day, pumped either by windmill or gasoline engine, as occasion requires, into a 5,000-gallon tank. The cement chimney to the boiler house is fifty feet high, thirty-six inches in diameter, and adds to the attractiveness of the plant.

CARNATIONS

Rooted Cuttings

SCARLET GLOW. (New) an extra good bright scarlet, a large flower and exceptional keeping qualities. It is in perfect health, and has that early and free flowering habit that characterizes a paying commercial variety. $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

PINK DELIGHT. Clear waxy shell pink. The variety that won over Enchantress at the A. C. S. meeting, Indianapolis, January, 1909. It has all the good points to make it the leader and with its unequaled substance, the best keeping and shipping carnation in the light pink class.

In 1909 we had no surplus stock to offer. With our large stock this season we are in a position to take care of all orders. $6.00 per 100; $50.00 per 1000.

We have large stocks of White Perfection, Rose-pink Enchantress, White Enchantress, Winona, Enchantress, Aristocrat.

BEACON. Selected, healthy, well rooted cuttings, $3.00 per 100; $25.00 per 1000.

We do not supply the cheapest, but the best.

F. DORNER & SONS CO., LA FAYETTE, IND.

House of New Carnation Sangamo, Photograph Made December 3, 1909, at My Establishment

Sangamo received certificate of merit at the meeting of the American Carnation Society at Indianapolis last January, scoring 85 points. It has been awarded certificate of merit and prizes wherever shown. Its strongest claim for popularity and convincing consideration is its productive power, as it will produce more splendid pink colored flowers than any other variety in commerce.

New Carnation Sangamo

(Originated by A. C. Brown)

Color—Brilliant, glistening pink, brighter than Winona.

Form—The flower is very symmetrical, the petals extending well above the calyx, showing their fine arrangement and the splendid coloring, the center developing more rapidly than most varieties. Calyx is strong and never bursts.

Stem—Perfect, what we consider ideal; extra long, strong and stiff. Giving blooms on 16-inch stems in October and increases to 30 to 36 inches. At no time of the year does the stem show any weakness, always holding the flower gracefully erect.

Substance—The keeping qualities are one of its best qualities. It also develops beautifully, after cutting, when placed in a cold room.

Productiveness—Exceedingly prolific, as new growth starts before the flower is taken, and grows rapidly, producing a fine bloom in remarkably short time. It is one of the very best commercial varieties on the market and will hold its own on the exhibition table, receiving high score and medals wherever shown.

Habit—Strong, healthy and clean, with upright growth, making breaks easily from the base of the plant. Makes a large plant in the field quicker than any other variety now in cultivation. The leaves are long and hard, not subject to stem rot or other disease, lifts easily from the field and establishes itself very readily. Does well with either inside or outside culture. Night temperature, 48 to 50 degrees, suits it the best, although it does well if grown with other varieties at a higher temperature. Propagates easily.

Prices—$ 12.00 per 100.
100.00 per 1000.
95.00 per 1000 in lots of 2500.
90.00 per 1000 in lots of 5000.
80.00 per 1000 in lots of 10,000 or more.

You will grow this variety sooner or later—why not get in at the same time as the progressive growers? Send an order today.

DES MOINES, IA.

The Market.

Downtown flower stores report business for last week only fair. The cloudy weather we have been having for nearly two weeks and the sudden cold snap of zero weather the last four days has shortened up the cut of roses and carnations. The outlook here now indicates a shortage of flowers for Christmas.

State Horticultural Society.

The Iowa State Horticultural Society held its forty-fourth annual convention, at the State Capitol, December 7, 8 and 9, with a large attendance. Wednesday afternoon, December 8, was set for the Iowa florists' part in the program and papers were read as follows: Some Observations on Gladioli, by G. D. Black, Independence; Begonias, by C. W. Davison, Des Moines; Carnations, by William Trillow, Des Moines; Lilies, by John T. Temple, Davenport; Hardy Perennials, by J. T. D. Fulmer, Des Moines; Plants of Recent Introduction Worthy of Further Trial, by J. S. Wilson, Des Moines.

The discussion of the papers read was quite interesting, many questions being asked by amateur florists and fruit growers, which brought out some exceptionally good points.

Various Notes.

The Iowa State corn show, which closed here December 11, was a great success as far as display went. Every foot of space in the Coliseum was taken at 50 cents per square foot. The display of corn and field seeds was fine, and the large display of agricultural implements of all kinds, together with the nicely arranged booths of many enterprising merchants, added wonderfully to the show.

Gus Papus, manager of the Alpha Floral Co., was in Chicago last week, looking up Christmas stock. The Alpha Floral Co. has installed a new ice-box, almost the width of the store, and it is a beauty.

Visitors last week were: John T. Temple, of Davenport, Ia.; W. P. Richey, of Albia, Ia., and F. J. Olsan, of Ames, Ia. BOOSTER.

Sangamo

Brilliant, glistening pink. Winner wherever shown: Chicago, St. Louis and Milwaukee. The greatest bloomer and fastest grower of any. Flowers perfect, stems long and stiff.

Why You Should Grow SANGAMO

1st.—It will give you more blooms in a season than any other variety. The fastest grower we have ever seen. 2nd.—It is the best color of anything in this class, Winsor, Rose-pink Enchantress or any other. 3rd —The blooms are well formed, nicely rounded out in the center, and do not fade. 4th.—The flower stands well above the calyx, making it impossible to split. 5th.—It comes early with long stems that are always stiff, holding the flower gracefully. 6th —The entire stock is clean and healthy. The cuttings root easily and the plants lift from the field and establish themselves without a set-back. 7th.—Not only an exhibition variety, but the best bread and butter Carnation for any florist to grow. Let us pay your coal bill for you.

Rooted cuttings guaranteed. January delivery, 100, $12; 1000, $100.

MARY TOLMAN

WINNER OF FIRST PRIZE AT MILWAUKEE.

Deep, flesh pink, the most beautiful color of any in this class. Does not fade in the strongest light. An excellent, clean, upright grower, long, stiff stems and perfectly formed flowers. Will produce more perfect blooms in a season than Enchantress. We want your order for this excellent Carnation. Orders booked now for January 1910 delivery. $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

The Market.

The Christmas rush is on and the prospects are good for a heavy trade. The flower stores are radiant with natural and artificial poinsettias. Lorraine begonias, azaleas and valley are also seen in large numbers. Carnations are scarce and chrysanthemums are on the wane, while roses and violets are plentiful and of good quality.

Various Notes.

Miss Margaret O'Conner and Miss Anna Moran are new salesladies at the Baur Floral Co.'s store.

Wm. McCarthy has some good giganteum lilies coming on for Christmas.

Chas. Offerle's carnations and sweet peas are in fine condition, and John Laver excels in violets and potted plants.

Baur Floral Co. has a fine lot of poinsettias.

Mrs. Williams has opened a floral department at Johnson's cloak store, 808 State street, and is getting her supply from the Floral Park Greenhouses.

The carnations shown by the Schluraff Floral Co. are hard to beat.

Frank Thayer, formerly with the Baur Floral Co.'s greenhouses, is now in the grocery business with his father, O. Thayer, on West Twenty-sixth street.

The Erie Floral Co. is sending large shipments of cut flowers to Wm. Kasting, of Buffalo. B. P.

NEW ORLEANS.

The Market.

The weather here has not yet been cold enough to touch the most tender plants, and the gardens around New Orleans look beautiful, with beds of late chrysanthemums surrounded by salvia and poinsettias. Funeral work and society decorations are reported brisk. We have been noticing in many places that field-grown carnations received lately from the north are doing poorly here. New Orleans is surely a hard spot in which to cultivate carnations. Some florists down here keep on saying that it can be done, but we are still waiting the realization of their knowledge how to do it. It will be a great saving in money left at home.

Various Notes.

George Thomas is cutting a fine variety of sweet peas. They are grown outdoors, of course.

Mrs. Menard, assisted by her son, Claude Orry, is continuing the business of her late husband, J. H. Menard.

Under the name of Shindler & Co., a corporation has been chartered to conduct a retail seed and flower business. The capital stock is fixed at the sum of $5,000. M. M. L.

ADMIRATION

This carnation we offer to the trade as being one of the finest Carnations of any color that we know of up to date. Being a beautiful shade of pink, somewhat lighter than Winona, having that beautiful satin finish, always showing up well either in natural or artificial light. Plants benched in August are now coming into full crop, carrying from 10 to 20 buds. We have been cutting since September 10th. As a money maker you will find no equal.

The size of the flower is 3 to 3½ inches, excellent form, well built up in the center, with the petals so arranged as to make it stand the general requirements of a good fancy commercial variety. A grand keeper and shipper.

The habit is ideal, upright with no surplus grass and every shoot going into flower. Its freedom and earliness make it nearly the ideal carnation. The calyx is very tough and seldom bursts. Can be handled with great success either from the field or grown inside all summer. No one has to be an expert to handle this variety. It scored 86 points at the American Carnation Society meeting at Indianapolis, January 27 to 28, 1909.

Price, $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.
250 at 1000 rate.

Send for catalogue of all other new and standard varieties of carnations. We are always pleased to have visitors come and inspect our stock and varieties.

WASHINGTON.

The Market.

Business last week was as good as could be expected, although, as usual, a little quiet just before the holiday season. While business has not been up to the top notch, good stock has been much in demand, owing to the decided change in weather conditions. The supply seems to have been cut right off, which naturally affects the price. Roses bring 8 cents and 10 cents for the best; carnations, 4 cents; valley, 4 cents; orchids, 75 cents each; gardenias, 50 cents each; violets, $1 per hundred; Paper Whites, 2½ cents each. Poinsettias are here in fine shape, bringing $3 and $4 for the best. Plenty of stevia is to be had.

Christmas stock of all kinds is to be seen, and the stores have the real Christmas air about them. All are looking forward to a good season.

Various Notes.

Z. D. Blackistone has been laid up with a severe attack of the grip, but expects to be about again within a week. Mr. Schottmeier, of this firm, reports business as good.

George Fields, the orchid man, is doing himself proud these days with some of the best cattleyas in the market.

The windows of J. H. Small & Sons, one day last week, were one mass of yellow chrysanthemums, something out of the ordinary this late in the season.

A unique and attractive table and mantel decoration was recently carried out by our well-known Connecticut avenue florist, Geo. H. Cooke. The table was of yellow pompons, while the mantel was banked with adiantum plants with yellow pompons throughout. Mr. Cooke is kept quite busy with work of this kind.

Gude Bros. Co. is still cutting some fine Nonin mums, which find ready sale. Their greenhouses are in excellent condition for the holidays.

Robt. Bowdler is in with some exceptionally fine Lilium giganteum that sell at sight.

The Washington Florists Co. is displaying, at its F street store, a large window of Claywood pottery in the burntwood effect. These people have a fine lot of poinsettias in pans, as well as everything else in the Christmas plant line.

Visitors last week included Mr. Schott, of M. Rice & Co., and Sidney Bayersdorfer, of H. Bayersdorfer & Co., both of Philadelphia. W. F.

BEGONIA LONSDALE.

We have a large stock of this light sport at the same prices as Lorraine. This variety is considered far superior to the original type, making a finer shaped plant, and holding the flowers much better; the color is a little lighter than the original Lorraine.

BEGONIA AGATHA.

A dwarf type of Lorraine with rich dark green foliage, and flowers a shade darker than Lorraine.

3-inch pots.....$20 per 100
3½-inch pots.....$25 per 100
5-inch pots.....$50 per 100
6-inch pots.....$9 per doz.

CYCLAMEN.

Our stock this year surpasses any we have ever had, and the plants are very well flowered.

4-inch pots.....$25 per 100
5-inch pots.....$6, $9 and $12 per doz.
6-inch pots.....$12, $15, $18 and $24 per doz.

AZALEAS.

Our Azaleas were never in finer condition for Christmas, and include one full house of that sterling variety Madame Petrick, also a large quantity of Hexe, Vervaeneana, Pauline Mardner, etc.

5½-inch, 6-inch and 7-inch pots at $9, $12, $15 and $18 per doz.
Larger plants.....at $2, $2.50 and $3 each

BERRIED AUCUBAS.

Fine plants, well berried, 7 and 8-inch pots at $15 and $18 per doz.

SOLANUM (JERUSALEM CHERRY).

Well berried, 6-inch pots.....at $6 and $7.50 per doz.

OTAHEITE ORANGES.

One of our best Christmas novelties.
Plants with from 3 to 12 fruits.....at 25c per fruit

CROTONS.

The largest and most complete collection of Crotons in America; of the very highest quality, and exceptionally well colored.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

The Market.

Business continues to be satisfactory, and a good many flowers are used up daily. The mum season is over and carnations and roses are falling into line. Some good stock is to be had. Roses are retailing at from $1 to $2.50 per dozen, with Beauties $3 to $8 per dozen. Carnations are selling at 75 cents and $1 per dozen. Violets and valley are about equal to the demand, and are bringing good prices. Violets demand $2 per hundred and valley sells at $1 per dozen. Some good bouvardia is coming in and sells at sight at $1 per dozen. Sweet peas are coming in, but are not selling well. The reason is unknown, as the stock is good at $1.50 per hundred. Lilies are in good supply, but none go to waste, being used in funeral work at $3 per dozen.

Other flowers and green goods are about equal to the demand. Prospects for Christmas are good, that is, if weather conditions are favorable, as several growers have good crops of roses and carnations which are coming on nicely and, with our share of sunshine, will be in O. K. Some good potted stock, such as begonias, cyclamens, primroses, azaleas, rhododendrons and some bulbs are coming in.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

The Market.

Business last week was good. Flowers are plentiful just now, and the demand is good. Carnations are looking fine and retail at 60 cents and 75 cents per dozen. Roses retail at $1.50 and $2 per dozen. Some nice My Maryland and White Killarney are to be seen in the uptown stores. Violets retail at $1 and $1.50 per hundred and Paper Whites sell at 60 cents per dozen. Stevia helps out fine, both for funeral work and cut flowers.

Everyone is busy making evergreen wreaths and getting ready for the Christmas rush. Last week was a cold one, and the coal pile suffered accordingly. Mums are selling at $2 and $3 per dozen and they are nearly all gone. Funeral work is good here.

Wm. P. Peirce is cutting some nice Nonin mums at his Elm street place.

RED WING

THE BEST

Geranium Novelty

For 1910

This new plant is a deep cardinal red, with a soft, velvety sheen, making it unusually attractive. It has a semi-double flower, of good substance, large trusses, very floriferous.

This plant is robust, of strong growth and makes an ideal pot plant or bedder, as it stands the sun well; has no rival in its wonderful color.

The Market.

Trade is rushing here at present and everything has taken on the holiday garb. Funeral work has been quite heavy and that, in addition to the holiday business, keeps everybody on the jump. Roses have been good and in fair supply, with the indications for heavy cuts Christmas week. Carnations are coming in fine, with good demand. Narcissus has made its appearance in quantities now, and helps out considerably on design work. Violets and sweet peas are in good supply and the demand is heavy on these, but the demand on valley has been rather light, although quite a few are used in funeral work. There are still a few mums to be had, but the demand is rather light. The poinsettias are much in evidence at present and there will be a good supply of them for Christmas. Lorraine begonias are fine and in good supply and some excellent specimens are to be seen. There will be a nice lot of azaleas, cyclamen and primroses, and the assortment of plants will be good for Christmas. Large quantities of holly and greens are used now in decorating the large department stores, and they are also using hundreds of the paper poinsettias. We are all anticipating heavy business for the holidays and big preparations are being made.

Various Notes.

G. Drobisch reports business unusually good.

E. Metzmaier has been busy for several days handling a big shipment of Christmas trees.

The Fifth Avenue Floral Co. has a fine lot of poinsettias and Lorraine begonias and expects heavy cuts in roses and carnations.

The Riverside Floral Co. reports business good.

L. E. Bundy is bringing in some extra fine sweet peas now.

The Livingston Seed Co. is handling large quantities of holly and green goods these days. J. M.

NAHANT, MASS.—Work on Thomas Roland's new greenhouses is nearly completed, and it is expected that they will be filled with stock for Christmas use.

Select Ferns For Fine Store Trade

We offer a grand lot of exceptionally well-grown plants of the different varieties of NEPHROLEPIS, which will be found one of the best selling and most profitable plants that florists can handle.

Our stock is in unusually fine shape, and we will guarantee it will please the most exacting, as it is exceptionally good value at the prices quoted.

IMPROVED ELEGANTISSIMA. The finest of all this type. It was introduced by us in 1905. This form of Elegantissima has been greately improved, and shows no tendency to revert to the Boston, making it the most valuable fern of this type. Strong plants, 4-inch pots, $3.00 per dozen; 6-inch, $6.00 to $9.00 per dozen, according to size; 8-inch, $12.00 to $18.00 per dozen, according to size.

SUPERBISSIMA. Introduced by us in 1908. A very unique and distinct novelty. Its distinguishing characteristics are its dark green foliage and dense growth. Fronds are very heavily imbricated, making them very dense and compact. Strong plants, 4-inch pots, $3.00 per dozen; 6-inch, $6.00 to $9.00 per dozen, according to size; 8-inch, $12.00 to $18.00 per dozen, according to size.

BOSTONIENSIS, PIERSONI, WHITMANI, SCOTTII. Extra fine plants, 6-inch pots, $6.00 per dozen; 8-inch pans, $12.00 per dozen.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Quite an improvement in business is noted and a steady movement seems to have set in, relieving the stagnation that prevailed during November. There has been a protracted spell of bad weather all this week and several out-of-town consignors lost the biggest part of their shipment on December 8. The thermometer fell from 50 to 6 above during that night and caught some shippers unaware. Sleet, ice and a disagreeable rain ruined much of the transient trade, Saturday, December 11, and especially did the stand holders at the Sixth street flower market have cause to complain.

The demand for roses is more active, with a fairly good supply, and all choice stock moves quickly. American Beauty are coming in heavier than in the previous weeks, but are nearly always ordered in advance. Brides, Maids and Killarney went up several notches and storemen seem to take kindly to the advance in prices. Carnations, of the standard varieties, were in brisk demand and sold readily at $3 and the fancy grades went up to $4; in fact, the demand was strong enough to necessitate close cutting to fill orders. Violets have been short of supply. Valley is enough to meet the demand at $3 to $4 per hundred and green goods, in all kinds, are to be had in quantity, except Asparagus plumosus.

Various Notes.

Owing to the disagreeable weather, the monthly meeting of the Cincinnati Florists' Society was postponed. There were not a sufficient number of members present to make a quorum, and as President Peterson was out of town, those assembled enjoyed themselves telling stories, etc.

R. Witterstaetter and some of his friends came back last week after a six days' successful hunting trip, through the northern part of Hamilton county. They sacked a number of rabbits, ducks, forty-two quail and one night owl.

Fred Kolthoff, one of our local nurserymen, reports a big trade in nursery stock this fall. He said that there was an unusually heavy demand for California privet, as they have used 72,000 feet up to now and have orders booked for 20,000 feet more in the spring.

Several carloads of holly have arrived and from reports it does not show up as good as last year. There will be more southern smilax used for store decorations than formerly, with artificial poinsettia.

Prepare for the Holidays

A View of one of Godfrey Aschmann's Gloire de Lorraine Houses, taken Nov. 18, 1909.

Have Lorraines to Beat the Band. Enough for All

Lorraine, Lorraine, none like this e'er yet seen,
Flowers bright like topaz, leaves with emerald sheen,
Jeweled bouquets, peerless, transcendent, fair,
Matchless and charming, none with them compare.
Buy yours of me, and sell as works of art;
Worthy a place in palace, home or mart.

Begonia Gloire de Lorraine. Have a whole house full of them in 6-in. sizes, in first-class condition, ready to bloom now and for the holidays. Our experiments in the past in raising and cultivating this early Christmas plant put us in the foreground and now we will be able to deliver them in a much improved condition, with flowers much brighter in color and hardier, standing shipping well. Everybody seeing them, even enemies, must admire them. They are cracker-jacks; 7-in. pots, $1.25 to $1.50; 6-in. pots, 50c, 75c to $1.00. The 75c and $1.00 sizes are almost as big as 8-in.; 3-in. pots, 15c.

Begonia Flambeau, 4-in., 15c; 5¼-in., 20c.

Begonia Vernon, 4-in., 15c.

Begonias. New improved Erfordii and Gracilis, 5¼-in., $2.50 per doz.

TESTIMONY FROM MICHELL.

I personally visited Mr. Aschmann's greenhouses September 21, 1909, and found that the Araucarias, Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, Boston, Whitmani, Scottii, Amerpohlii, Todeaoides ferns, Rubber Plants, Kentias and Arecas are indeed A No. 1. Have never seen any better plants. The Gloire de Lorraine begonias in 6-in. pots are a perfect wonder, bushy and clean. Have never seen his greenhouses filled with plants as good as they are now.

MINNEAPOLIS.

The Market.

Cold weather prevailed the whole of last week, turning into a blustering snow storm toward the last. Stock was set back somewhat, but there is not much demand yet for cut stock, though plants are being shipped and spaced off to retailers. There seems to be a great variety of fine blooming plants on the market and the outlook for cut flowers is good, with prices well up.

Various Notes.

The joint meeting of the Minnesota Horticultural Society and the State Florists' Association, held at the Unitarian church, Wednesday evening, December 8, was a good meeting and well attended, especially by the Minneapolis florists. Exhibits were made by Will Bros., L. S. Donaldson Co., and Lakewood Cemetery Greenhouse; the latter did not compete for prizes. Awards were as follows: Will Bros., first prizes for Richmond, Killarney and White Killarney; L. S. Donaldson Co., first prize for Bridesmaid; second prize for Richmond. Papers were read, as follows: "House Plants and Their Care," by A. J. Smith; "Outdoor Perennials," by Mr. Meyer; "Spring Flowering Bulbs," by Aug. S. Swanson. A great deal of business was brought up, and the members expressed themselves satisfied with the success of the meeting.

William Desmond is now manager of the cut flower department of the L. S. Donaldson Co., Mr. Schnell having resigned.

William Topel is again with R. A. Latham, preparing for the usual Christmas rush.

James Souden is making a fine window display daily, and is showing a number of artistic baskets.

Miss Whitted finds business not to be complained of, even during the present lull. She had some good funeral work lately.

The Holland salesmen are upon us, and every day brings familiar faces, as well as some of the new adventurers.

PORTLAND, ME.—The E. J. Harmon Co. has opened a store in the new Baxter building. It is a spacious, handsomely equipped store, and is said to be one of the finest in the eastern states. Miss Mabel I. Hayes is one of the managers of the new establishment.

GALESBURG, ILL.—The demand for Pillsbury's carnation staple, placed on the market by the Pillsburys of this city, has necessitated the establishment of a branch office in Canada, and Walter Pillsbury, son of I. L. Pillsbury, is now in Windsor, Ont., superintending the manufacture of them.

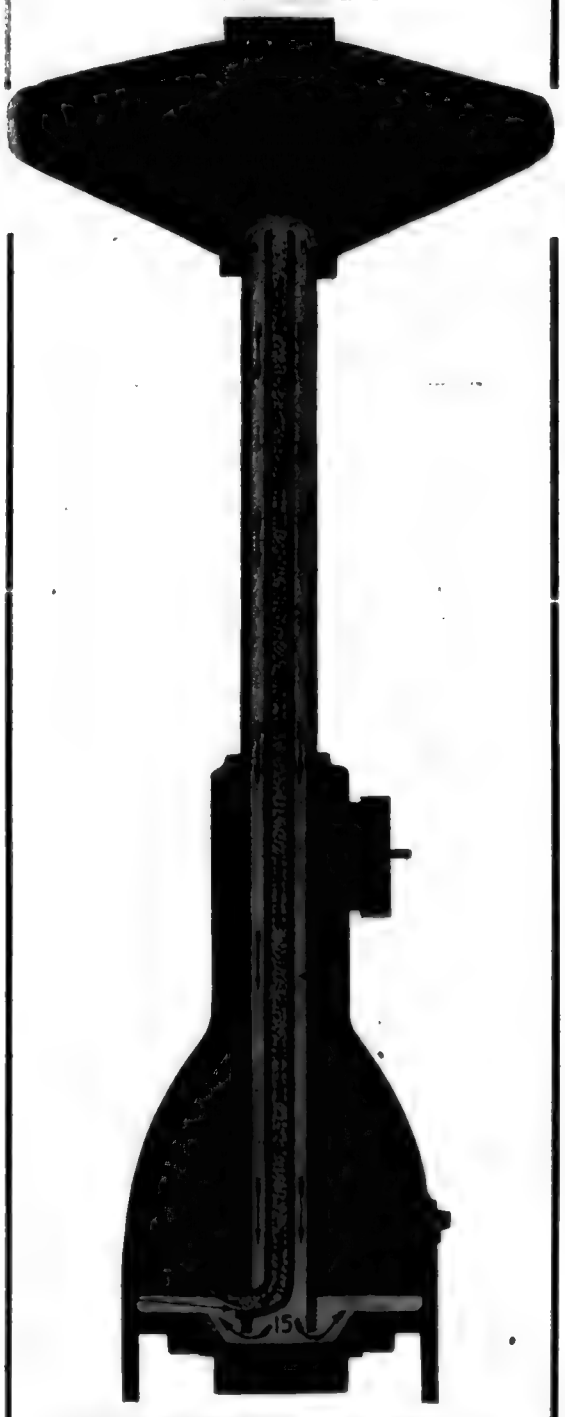
Get One for Your Boiler



The Generator is giving good satisfaction. It adds to the capacity of the boiler by increasing the velocity of the hot water circulation. It also maintains a steadier and more even temperature all over the houses when in use. In case of sudden change in the weather, the pipes can be made hot very quickly. With the thermometer registering zero outside it was no trouble to keep up the temperature in the houses, the boiler running seven hours without attention.

I had no trouble in connecting the Generator to our heating system, following your instructions and the blue print you sent. I feel that the Generator would benefit any system of hot water heating.

Greenhouse Heating.

THE unusually severe cold weather, 20 degrees or more colder than normal for this time of year, not only made inroads on the growers' coal piles, but tied up railroad traffic, making it difficult to replenish as promptly as usual. It is a mistake to pursue a hand to mouth policy.

SIZE OF BOILER NEEDED.

How many horse-power will be required to heat 130,000 square feet of glass surface to 60 degrees in zero weather?

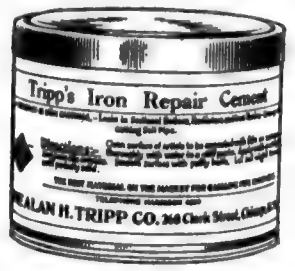
A. R.

The amount of radiation required will be about 26,000 square feet, and for this amount it will be well to use 350 to 400 horse-power, to do the work economically. My suggestion would be to put in two 200 horse-power boilers, as it would be possible to heat the plant with one of the boilers in mild weather and it might not be necessary to keep up steam in the other boiler for more than two months during midwinter. This plan would also furnish a reserve boiler, which could be relied on to maintain at least 50 degrees in any weather, should anything happen to the other boiler.

THE COAL MARKET.

Smith, Lineaweaver & Co., Philadelphia, report the following:

"The anthracite coal market conditions are active, there being a large demand for domestic sizes from the retail coal yards and for steam sizes for manufacturers and heating purposes. A number of operations in the field are closed down on account of shortage of water, which is more serious than it has been for many years, and it will require considerable rain to remedy the situation. Water is being hauled great distances in tank cars and tne situation is rather precarious in many sections. This, of course, has a tendency to create a shortage.



"The bituminous coal market is quite active indeed, owing to the resumption of business generally, and also to car shortage, which is very marked. Almost every operator is suffering seriously from this cause, and a car shortage so early in the year would lead one to believe that instead of getting better, it will get worse as the winter advances. It is, therefore, advisable to keep good stocks of both anthracite and bituminous coal on hand."

HEAT FROM RESIDENCE.

I have a house 15x45 feet and nine feet to the ridge, with 24-inch board walls, glass gables and 30-inch glass sides. I want to heat the house from a boiler which I intend to put into the cellar of the residence, fifty feet away. The bottoms of the benches are six feet ten inches above the level of the cellar floor, but I could make a pit and put the boiler still lower, if necessary. I intend to have the pipes enter on the right side of the greenhouse door and go clear around to the left, the returns coming back to the point of entrance. What size of boiler would I need to keep the house at least at 40 degrees, when the weather goes to 15 degrees below zero? What kind of pipes should be used, 4-inch or smaller?

The pipes will have to be carried underground. Will I have to carry the flow right over on an incline or could I go down underground and then rise? The cellar floor is four feet below the outside level and the greenhouse stands about eighteen inches higher than this.

If I buy a round boiler of local make, what size of grate will I need?

F. C. M.

While the arrangement of piping as proposed would provide a fairly good circulation, I would prefer to carry a 2½-inch flow pipe over the door, and, dropping down, connect with a coil of four 2-inch pipes, which should run completely around the house to the door, where a 2½-inch return should lead to the boiler. If the plan of piping proposed by F. C. M. is used, there should be one 2½-inch flow pipe and two returns of the same size in the coil. This will provide about 300 square feet of radiation in the greenhouse, which, together with the mains, will make about 400 square feet of radiation in the piping.

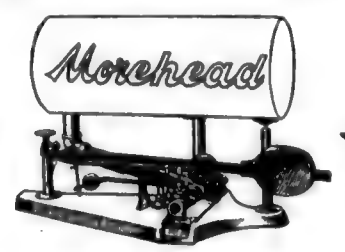
It will be well to select a boiler rated for about 600 square feet of radiating surface. The flow and return pipes running from the boiler to the greenhouse should be 2½-inch. After being insulated with asbestos packing, they should be covered with 6-inch sewer pipe for a permanent job, although a box of wood would answer.

The size of the grate will depend somewhat upon the construction of the heater and the kind of coal used. A 20-inch grate would be a minimum size in any case, and it would not need to be larger than twenty-four inches in diameter.

The boiler should be set sufficiently low to allow carrying the flow pipe leading to the greenhouse underground with a rise of at least one inch in twenty feet.

HEAT REGULATION.

One of the chief concerns of every florist and grower is the proper and accurate regulation of heat in the greenhouse, particularly at night, when a little negligence on the part of the night fireman may mean hundreds of dollars damage because the house is allowed to grow too cold or too hot. About the only sure way of eliminating this danger is the installation of some method of temperature alarm. There are a number of concerns manufacturing these alarms, and any florist will find it a good investment to protect his stock in this manner.



POOR CIRCULATION.

This fall I built three houses, 16x40, running north and south. The two west ones are open, and have three feet of glass in the east and west sides and two and one-half feet of concrete wall all around, banked up with earth. The walls are set in the ground eighteen inches. The north end of the east house abuts against my residence. I have an upright sectional boiler, with a capacity of 2,650 feet, 600 feet of which is used for house radiation. I am located in northwestern Iowa.

I had an expert put in the piping, which is as follows: A 4-inch pipe is run to the south end, then west far enough to be connected with coils, each consisting of seven 1½-inch pipes. Then the main is reduced to 3-inch, and three sets of coils of seven 1½-inch pipes are put on. The main is then reduced to 2-inch, and two sets of seven 1½-inch pipes are put on. At the north end the return pipes are put in on the same scale as the flow pipes.

There is practically no circulation beyond the first two coils. I claim that there are too many pipes for the size of the flow, and that the flow pipes should have been on the north side and a part of the radiation should have been along the walls. I have a contract guaranteeing a perfect circulation, with a temperature of 52 degrees in the coldest weather in the west part and 70 degrees in the east part. Please tell me if this is not a poor heating arrangement and how it could be improved. H. N. A.

The question does not give the number of coils in the east house, but if the number is the same as in the middle house there should be no difficulty in maintaining a temperature of 70 degrees. Twelve 1½-inch pipes in the middle house and fourteen in the west house should be sufficient for 60 degrees. If each coil is taken off separately a 2-inch pipe would answer, but a 2½-inch connection with the flow-pipe would be better if all are fed from one pipe.

While better results could have been secured had 2-inch returns been used in the coils, there is no reason why all of the coils, as now arranged, should not circulate if the piping is properly put in and the top of the boiler is two or more feet below the lowest part of the returns. I would have preferred, however, to use a 2½-inch overhead flow, or two 2-inch wall flows, and ten to fifteen 2-inch returns.

A TEXAS GREENHOUSE.

We have a small upright boiler with 2-inch connections, for hot water. We also have a lot of 2-inch pipe. We wish to heat a house 20x100 and five feet six inches to the gutter. In this part of Texas we have quite a mild climate, with a winter temperature which seldom goes below 15 degrees above zero. My plumber proposes to have the flow pipes rise to a height of four feet above the top of the boiler and then extend on a downward slant to the farther end of the house, where they would be connected directly with the returns. I have proposed the installation of two flows with a gradual rise to the farther end, where they would drop straight downward to the returns. In this latter case, would you put one line of pipe on the north wall and one on the purlin posts, or all on the north wall? Or would you put two flows on the purlin posts and two returns on the north wall? W. C. H.

This question does not indicate the class of plants to be grown in the greenhouse, nor the temperature that is to be required, but for 60 degrees I would prefer to put in fifty per cent more radiation. It would probably be possible to hold the temperature up to 50 degrees with the proposed system with the mercury 15 degrees above zero.

Either of the plans proposed would give a good circulation, although I would prefer to give the flow pipe a gradual fall away from the boiler and then bring the returns back as high as it is possible to have them and still have them where the heat is required. For a house twenty feet wide, it would be well to run a flow pipe on each wall and connect each of them with two 2-inch return pipes, for 60 degrees.

Using the other method, the pipes could be connected with at the farther end of the house by the use of manifolds, which should be 2 inches in diameter. At the other end of the house the coils could be connected by means of a nipple, which would join a tee upon one pipe with a right and left ell upon the other.

The "Florist's Favorite" Cut Flower Box is the best and neatest made box on the market to-day. The board used is a very fine, high-grade Manila, highly calendered, firm and smooth. The inside is white, giving the box a very neat and attractive appearance. All of the sizes listed are made from this grade of board; heavy stock in the large sizes and lighter in the smaller ones.

Our Improved Lock Corner never unhooks. The creasing is such that the corners do not break; however, they fold very easily and are quickly set up and make a very shapely box. All covers are notched on the edge—this is an advantage in removing the cover; it improves the looks and the tops are easily distinguished if there is no printing. The large Shipping, Design and Pillow Boxes have a hole punched on each side of the top or cover, about two inches from the edge, which is very convenient when removing the cover. All "Favorite" Boxes are made full telescope, therefore strong and rigid, and will not collapse as the shallow-cover boxes do.

The annual meeting of the Lenox Horticultural Society, held Satudray, December 4, was largely attended. President A. Jenkins occupied the chair. H. C. Whitman was unanimously elected an active member of the society.

Letters were read from the judges of the fall exhibition, congratulating the members upon the magnificent display. Special praise was bestowed upon the plant groups and vegetable collections.

The treasurer and secretary read their annual reports, which showed the society to be in a flourishing condition financially and otherwise. Special applause greeted these announcements, and everyone agreed that this has been a banner year in the annals of the society.

The following were unanimously elected officers for the ensuing year: President, George Foulsham; vice-president, George Breed; treasurer, Walter Jack; secretary, George H. Instone; assistant secretary, Joseph Pybus.

Before leaving the chair, President A. Jenkins thanked the members for their loyal support during his tenure of office and said he trusted the same goodfellowship would always exist among the members. A rising vote of thanks was accorded the retiring officers, after which the new elected officers were installed.

After business had been disposed of, refreshments were served. When cigars had been passed, the rest of the evening was enlivened with speech-making, recitations and singing. A most enjoyable time was brought to a close just before midnight by singing "Auld Lang Syne."

MONEY IN BANKS.

More than 25,000,000 people have deposit accounts in the banks in the United States and its insular possessions, according to statements contained in the annual report of Lawrence O. TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

The annual flower show of the Tarrytown Horticultural Society may be held in Irvington next year, as the residents of that place are anxious to have it as a fall attraction. The society at a recent meeting appointed Robert Angus, Edward W. Neubrand and James W. Smith as a committee to see about securing a hall. This year the show was held in White Plains, because a hall could not be secured in Tarrytown. If the committee is unable to get a hall here, it will probably go to Irvington, where there is a fine hall suitable for the exhibition.

The committee has also appointed Edward W. Neubrand, David McFarland and James W. Smith to arrange for its annual dinner, which will probably be held at the Florence Hotel, Irvington.

The society has nominated John Woodcock, of Ossining, for president; James Stewart and Alexander Maitland, for vice-president; Edward W. Neubrand, secretary; Edward M. Berrien, treasurer; John Brunger, corresponding secretary; William Scott and David McFarland as hold-over on the executive committee. The following have also been named for the same committee: Robert Angus, William Jamieson, Louis A. Martin, J. Stewart, Thomas Aitchison, Claude Wilson, Nathan Brewer, John Brunger, George Whitlinger and Alexander McKenzie. F. R. Pierson, Isaac Requa, Frank V. Millard and Dr. R. B. Coutant have been named representatives of the active members.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.

Mayor John S. Bransford has made the final transfer of the Salt Lake Floral Co. to W. W. Wilson and D. E. Law. The property, which lies between Eleventh and Twelfth streets, South and State and Main streets, is valued at $18,000. Some years ago Will Clark, son of former Senator W. A. Clark, of Butte, Mont., backed a florist and about $35,000 were spent for greenhouses. The venture failed and the property went into the possession of the Bransfords, under whose direction it prospered during the last eighteen months. Mayor Bransford then sold it to Law & Wilson, who are also from Butte.

William Hadfield, formerly proprietor of the Gordon Greenhouses, at 1616 Park street, has accepted a position as head gardener at Wandamere park, in this city.

N.Y. BELTING & PACKING CO. LTD. MAGIC NEW YORK

FURNISHED in continuous lengths of 500 feet. An exceptionally high grade hose manufactured with a woven jacket insertion instead of cotton duck, and with specially selected rubber in the inner tube and cover.

The woven jacket construction makes a stronger hose than can be obtained from cotton duck, and absolutely precludes the possibility of cover opening at seam—a common cause of failure of hose made on cotton duck. This construction also gives a more flexible hose and reduces the possibility of kinking.

"Magic" Hose is guaranteed to stand a pressure of 500 pounds per square inch, although its bursting pressure is far in excess of this.

GROWING MIXED CROPS.

A Massachusetts Man's Methods.

In regard to growing to get good results, I should be pleased to tell you some of my experience in the greenhouse business. I have grown lettuce, radishes, beets, cucumbers, violets, sweet peas, carnations, calla lilies and chrysanthemums, one crop after another. The fall crops never any more than exchanged an old dollar for a new one, but the spring crops paid well. I have grown cucumbers in the fall and had them bearing in January and February and received $1.50 per dozen, but they did not pay. I have grown other cucumbers that bore in April, May, June and July, and which netted me $1,500 in the same house.

Now, to grow almost any of these crops, such as sweet peas, cucumbers and lettuce, you need a soil about eighteen inches deep, thoroughly mixed with fine horse manure. Twenty-five or thirty tons of fine horse manure will suffice for about 12,000 square feet. Apply that amount twice a year and you will be able to grow three crops; namely, one crop of lettuce in the fall, one crop of radishes in the winter and one crop of cucumbers in the spring and summer, or one crop of violets in the fall and winter, four or five crops of plants in the spring and a late crop of cucumbers in the summer.

Cucumbers on Benches.

To grow cucumbers on benches, five or six inches of soil is plenty and they will grow as much in one day on the benches as they will in two days in the solid beds. They will not grow so large, but will be fully as numerous. A crop will last about two months. In solid beds it will take about five months to get the same number of cucumbers as you would on the benches.

In regard to watering, never wet the cucumber foliage if you can avoid it. Water the plants well when they are dry, but do not water them when they are wet; that is the main point. As to ventilation, do not give them too much of it. Never open the house until it gets above 90 degrees and do not let the temperature go below 50 degrees if you can prevent it. They will stand without being hurt at 40 degrees if they are dry, and at 120 degrees providing they are wet, but the best temperature is from 60 to 90 degrees for any variety of cucumber I know of.

Crops Without Heat.

Violets and sweet peas, lettuce or radishes can be grown without heat, providing you have a high house. Sometimes violets will fade on account of the cold, and sweet peas will lose some buds, but if you run a house without any heat with any of these crops, run it on the dry side and do not ventilate it; the air cooling off at night will purify it.

GROWING MIXED CROPS.

Now, any man with any of these crops can take care of 20,000 feet of glass providing he is a working man, but if he is one of those fellows that wear a white collar, cuffs and a pair of glasses, it will take about five of them. To run 20,000 feet of glass costs about $7 a day in any part of the New England states, but I advise no man to build a greenhouse and go to gardening without a few years' experience, for a good, all-around grower must be a painter, glazier, steamfitter, a first-class carpenter and a good farmer, healthy and able to work.

Napoleon Lemay.

BOOM IN THE GLASS BUSINESS.

Manufacturers of window glass at Columbus, O., said the other day that the demand for glass had shown a big increase in the last few weeks and the price had advanced on all grades so that it is estimated that the manufacturer will now receive $100 more a car for his glass than a few weeks ago. The dealers during the summer bought glass only as needed, but in the last month they have been stocking up heavily in anticipation of a big demand the coming year and this has strengthened prices materially. The Imperial Window Glass Co., the new organization of the independent manufacturers, is prepared to open its headquarters in Pittsburg by the first of the year.

The Review can supply any horticultural books at publishers' prices.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

EBLE'S NEW STORE.

New Orleans is known in the trade as one of the best flower towns in the United States, and the accompanying illustration will be of interest as showing the style of flower store these modern times demand in the Crescent City.

Charles Eble has been in the florists' business in New Orleans for over twenty-five years, but never has been so well fixed to do business as since he opened this store in the Grunewald Hotel building early in the present season. The fixtures are in every way the best that it was possible for him to procure and he carries the highest grade of stock, catering to the best trade in his town.

That first-class facilities are a good investment is shown by Mr. Eble's report that trade showed an immediate increase as soon as he opened this store.

EVENTIDE.

By Carl Stumm.

An old edition, a rare old edition among books in modern bindings, for contrast's sake, would best describe a bent figure which stood within a florist's shop on upper Fifth avenue. Clearly he was not a purchaser of the goods more precious in these wintry days than the camel's pack from the orient.

The holiday thrill was in the air, as the gay spirited pedestrians and occupants of vehicles, from teamsters' carts to autos, bustled past upon the lively thoroughfare. Beside the embanked palms and ferns he stood and looked through the wide expanse of window.

Of age probably 60 years, he had long since ceased the combat on the field of his chosen occupation. There was no surrender to the circumstances which held him captive, until his release through time. Nor was he broken in health or will through the reverses of life, which with sheer strength had cast him upon the wastes of a present generation.

He was an old-time gardener from foreign soil, who had removed to the newer country as the artisans in all lines had come. Upon starting his trade in the western world while yet a young man, he had caught the spirit of the city and no longer wished to be confined to rural bounds in his work. Drifting to New York, he tried to find employment for his ready hand at the trade he knew, but the small yards and poor facilities for city gardens soon became too barren ground for much chance of a livelihood through his dexterity.

At last taking up odd tasks among the florists, he here and there, and in seasons, gathered stipends for trivial though responsible duties. And in so doing he enjoyed his dividends, although irregular in receipt or amount, with the same zest as a speculator reaps his profits or a gambler clears the board. In short, he was the willing hand to deliver packages of fragile flowers with care and tact, nearly always receiving some fee from his employer, as well as a gratuity at the finish of his trip.

The week was a busy one, with many deliveries to make—gay holly wreaths; blooming plants swathed from the cold to preserve their brief life after their short and rapid growth in the greenhouses; cut flowers in all shapes and arrangements and for all destinations, from the dreary window in some hospital to the brilliant banquet board.

"Jim!" called the proprietor to his aide.

"Yessir!" With alacrity the addressed presented himself for orders.

"Take this holly wreath, Jim, and don't lose any more time than you have to in getting back. It's a long ways to go, but I know you can find the way all right."

The carrier put on his spectacles, to inspect the tag with all the deliberation of a justice examining a brief.

"Richly" was the name, and under it were these directions for setting out upon his trip: "Elevated to the bridge; Brooklyn trolley changing to South Brooklyn; walk five blocks, enter gate at left and follow road straight ahead to Oak Hill. Take path to enclosure and leave wreath at door."

"These directions are more than ordinarily long," ruminated the old man, as he fumbled in his pockets with one hand for his car fare, and with the other for his standby on such journeys, which was a comforting plug of chewing tobacco. Absently he gazed at the owner of the Elite Cut Flower Palace over his glasses, in mute appeal as to what manner of customer came such a distance when holly wreaths were to be bought in the farthest reaches of the City of Churches. He did not ask for information on the point, as superfluous conversation was generally discouraged among the help during a rush; furthermore, he did not wish to appear nonplused at anything which should devolve upon him as his duty.

Shouldering the gay emblem of Christmas cheer, this helper started on his way; for, after all, the longer the trip the more enjoyable, and one of his reliability should be chosen to carry out specific directions. But, best of all, there was that waiting tip, which in this case was doubly assured both by the pains to be taken and by the singularly appropriate name of the consignee—Richly—which somehow suggested opulence, possibly to the tinkle of a half dollar, or at least a quarter.

This observation might be construed as intuition, but more properly, Jim thought, as keen business insight; such comprehension as might have been the foundation of large fortunes, such as Richly's, for instance.

So convinced was he of his good prospects of a little change before he returned, that he left the train at City hall and shouldered his way into a well patronized barroom for a sort of milestone potation. This was taken, with another for reserve, and the large wreath moved from the dramshop amid exclamations from the bystanders.

As the next car taken nosed its way across the old bridge, the sky became heavily overcast, while a blur of fine snow hid the river below and the shores at either side; this ride was a short one, giving entry to Brooklyn's busy streets. On a near corner twinkled merry lights in front of plate glass and mahogany. This, of course, being in such contrast to the enveloping weather, a new lease of ambition was taken on the premises.

Now for the last stage of the ride and the circuitous walk, which itinerary should be thoroughly memorized within the car: "South Brooklyn, walk five blocks, enter gate and follow road." "Put down two and carry four," the old man further mumbled, a bit amused at his own state of mind, and with a chuckle he dozed off, while the motor under the car whirred its singsong.

With a jar and cessation of noise the car stopped, while a cold blast swept through it. The old man started up and perceived the red-nosed and red-cheeked motor man as he called through the door: "All out! No farther on this line!"

Hastily leaving the car, the old fellow beheld a dreary waste of snow with a few houses, none of which the Richlys could possibly reside in. He walked his five blocks, after careening through the drifts and tacking with the wind, which pushed and pulled on the wreath as though it were a sail upon some meaner craft.

And here were the gates. Very spacious grounds within, but just as dreary looking as without. The road was discernible beyond, as some carriages had but lately passed along. Following the tracks, he reached the grove of oaks and passed through them on the footpath. Twilight was now upon the setting of the scene, with the shrubbery and woody tangle, but there was no house or sign of a house. To look straight ahead in the teeth of the gale and sleet was impossible; so, plodding along with head down, he reached the end of the walk and was stopped by a low iron fence. As he peered up through the gloom, the first thing to catch his eye was the name, Richly, carved in large block letters in gray stone above a small door, which looked very dark, as though it might lead to the innermost recesses of the earth. A strip of purple ribbon, fastened on the door grating, flapped against the dull walls, an ensign of the departed.

Reverently opening the gate and stepping to the tomb, Jim, with hat in hand, placed the circle in the door space, while a swirl of snowflakes, caught up from the ground, circled his pathetic bent frame and, rising above him, paused and fluttered down a soft benediction on his bowed gray head.

FROST ON SHOW WINDOWS.

In reading the December 16 issue of the Review, I noticed the inquiry by G. M. N. & S., asking how to keep the show windows clear of frost and vapor. I believe that the following remedy will do the business in a satisfactory manner, as I have seen the principle tried to perfection a number of times. Jewelry and other stores are using it with great success and no doubt it will do the same for florists' windows. The only objection that I can possibly see is that it might interfere with some of the decorations, but that should be easily remedied.

The idea is simply this: To install a small electric fan where the current of air created by it will sweep across the inside of the window, and if the window has not become coated with ice it will clear in a few minutes and remain clear.

I know the annoyance caused by windows becoming coated and I believe that a sure cure will be a welcome guest in any store, so I gladly give this to you to hand out to our brother florists through the columns of the Review.

I have received many valuable helps from its columns and feel in duty bound to contribute anything of value to others in a like manner. A. E. P.

THE BRIDE'S BOUQUET.

The accompanying illustration is reproduced from a photograph of a bride's bouquet made by Bertermann Bros. Co., Indianapolis. The materials were cattleyas, valley, Farleyense and asparagus, with ribbon, and in sending the photograph Irwin Bertermann said the picture gives only an inadequate idea of the light and airy grace of the arrangement. Asparagus, while among the lightest and most graceful of the materials with which the cut flower worker deals, is among the most difficult to photograph, because in the picture it usually looks black and bunchy.

A Bride's Bouquet.

HE PUSHED THE BUTTON.

J. E. Cornell, the florist of Danbury, Conn., has always been a firm believer in signs and has used many in his business with success. But his faith in signs was recently somewhat shaken by reason of a little episode that occurred during the night. Mr. Cornell, who lives in the block a few doors from his store, had placed a sign on his door which was illuminated at night so that it could be read across the street.

The sign in question read: "You can get me in two minutes any time by pushing the button at the left." Mr. Cornell had his name printed at the bottom of the sign, so all who read might know who it was that could thus be so quickly summoned. This sign caused the nightly trouble.

An individual came rolling along White street, eastward bound, shortly after midnight and his progress was helped by the pushes he gave himself from time to time as he bumped against the stores along the way. He finally lined up in front of the florist's store, the light in the window serving as a beacon to attract him. In a half-muddled way he made out the significance of the sign and reached over and pushed the first button to the left three times.

The result of pushing the button was that three sharp rings of the alarm bell awoke the echoes of the Cornell bed chamber in the block. The florist jumped out of bed, put on trousers over his pajamas, got into slippers and made a rush for the store, hitting the stairs, so he says, about three times on the way down.

He rushed out into the cold air of the December night, and found the muddled individual standing on the walk, braced against the front of the store, with his watch in his hand. The florist asked the man if he rang and what he wanted.

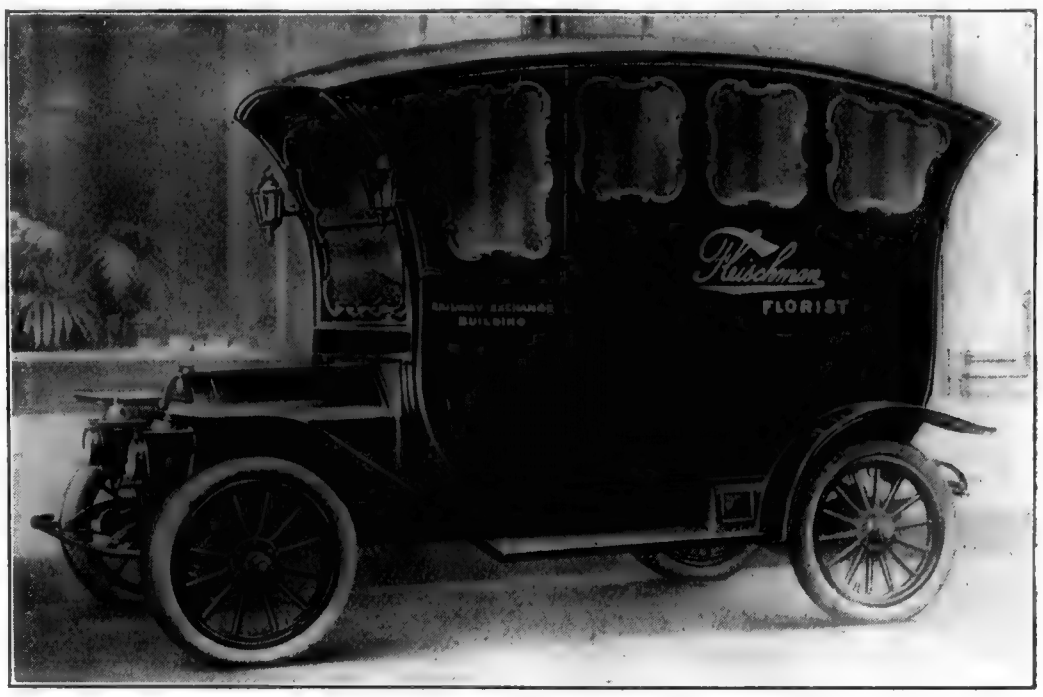
"Shay," began the individual, "you're all righ', shee; you're all righ'! Jus' a little behin', that's all; a little behin'. The sign shays, come in two minutes, but it took you three to get here. How you account for shat, anyway?"

Without waiting to hear further from the individual, Mr. Cornell went into the store, switched off the connection, and then crawled back upstairs and got into bed again, safe in the knowledge that no one else would be able to ring the bell for a while, anyway. The following morning he was wondering whether he would connect the push botton and the bell or remove the sign from the door window.

A few nights previously a policeman discovered that the fish pond in the window of the florist's store had run over, the cause being a small goldfish which had got into and plugged up the waste pipe. The policeman rang all the bells and awoke everybody in the block before he succeeded in getting Mr. Cornell. All of which helps to shake the florist's faith in signs and push buttons.

THE FLEISCHMAN AUTO.

In the last few years automobiles have become so common that they pass absolutely without notice in almost any part of the country, but when the new motor delivery car of the Fleischman Floral Co. rolls down the boulevard in Chicago, it reminds one of the joke once current in the variety shows. Something to this effect:



"It was a rainy day and the young person of many charms was crossing the street as Wood and Stone sat looking out of the club window. 'Did you see that?' they spoke in unison, as Wood turned to Stone and Stone turned to Wood—and then they both turned to rubber."

The Fleischman auto does not get by without everyone turning for a second look.

There are two special features about the Fleischman auto: its shape and its color. The shape of the body and top are clearly shown in the accompanying illustration, but the color is something that must be seen in the original to be appreciated. There never was another auto colored like it. Without being a color expert one would say that it was neither purple, mauve nor lilac, but something of all three. At any rate the color is striking and attractive.

It is said that the Fleischman auto in shape and color was designed by B. Rubel, president of the Fleischman Floral Co. It was built by the Stoddard-Dayton people. It has only been on the street a few weeks, but as an advertisement it has already proved its worth and it has every indication of demonstrating its practicability as well. It is figured that the automobile will do the delivery work of three teams and in case of rush orders it will save much time.

CHRISTMAS CUT FLOWERS.

Retail florists who protest at the advance in prices which takes place at the holidays seldom give a thought to the fact that the demand suddenly swells to several times its previous volume; they call for four or five times as much stock as they have taken before and write with the order to "of course send nothing but fresh flowers," that day's cut, without stopping to consider how the stock is to be supplied. But someone has to give the supply more than a passing thought. Here is a letter that a far-sighted commission man sent to all his growers December 15:

"There are a great many more flowers wanted for a holiday than any other time, and the growers are expected to furnish this extra supply. There are several ways of doing this—some time their regular crop to be at its heaviest; others grow special crops for the holidays; others hold their regular cut and put it all on the market at once.

"The former two ways are commendable, and we are glad to say that most of our growers handle their crops that way, but the latter practice is condemnable if overdone, and it is on this that we want to make a few remarks. If you feel that you must hold some stock, then please don't overdo it. Carnations should not be cut and held in water over twenty-four hours. Don't keep roses too cold. Remember that stock shipped Wednesday and Thursday is expected to be in good condition Christmas day and Sunday.

"Grade the stock carefully, and mark up for us what is shipping stock, and what we should sell to local trade for immediate use. This will be a great help to satisfy the trade, and our satisfied customers are your best friends. Let us work together.

"Wednesday, December 22, and Thursday, December 23, will be the heavy shipping days. Let all the stock come on these two days in equal proportions. Drop us a line on receipt of this, or inform us otherwise, as to the amount of stock you expect to have. We will be extremely busy these two days, and any help that you can give us in careful selecting, packing and marking up your stock will be greatly appreciated."

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS

Sweet Peas.

The sale for sweet peas is usually somewhat sluggish during the chrysanthemum season. From Christmas onward they are in much better demand, at improving prices. Growers who planted early and have a house in good crop now will find them a paying investment, for the weeks following Christmas usually find the market comparatively bare of flowers. Exercise care in temperatures; we find 48 to 50 degrees a safe average at night. It may run a little higher on mild nights, and can advance to 60 to 65 degrees, with sunshine, during the day. With cold nights, when more fire heat is required, a close watch is necessary in order to keep red spider in check. Dampen the house more frequently where the heat is the most drying, and on clear days use the spray nozzle on the plants. Let this be done early, so that they will be dry before nightfall. Avoid anything in the nature of a too humid and close atmosphere. This, with cold drafts, will start mildew, which plays havoc with a crop.

During midwinter the plants need little feeding. If the earliest ones show any signs of exhaustion, give them a top-dressing of sheep or cow manure. Let the latter be well decayed and stir the surface soil before watering it in. With the clearing out of Christmas crops, it is now possible to give some additional space to peas. Any vacant beds or benches can now be planted with them. Never use old soil for them. They are strong feeders and the best compost you have is none too good for them. Always plant where there is ample head-room and abundant light, and remember that the bigger the house the better the peas will do, if properly cared for.

Poinsettias.

The sale for cut poinsettias is largely limited to Christmas week and the demand for the brilliant bracts is slight after that date. We hope you managed to dispose of all your flowers at profitable prices. Do not omit the saving of an adequate number of stock plants for another season. Year after year we see people scurrying around for stock plants about the time propagation should be under way. If you want stock and intend to grow a quantity another year, now is the time to buy it. If in pots or pans, simply lay them on their sides under a bench in a house kept at 45 to 50 degrees at night. If lifted from beds or benches, they can be heeled closely in boxes of soil and kept in a cellar or shed where the right temperature is maintained. Do not do any pruning now; that can be done when you start them, which need not be for several months yet.

Speaking of poinsettias, some inquiries reach us as to the value of the white variety. It has little commercial value, but the so-called double variety, plenissima, is a good thing and not seen so much as it ought to be. Of course, poinsettias are in reality euphorbias, and that reminds us that another useful member of this family, E. jacquiniæflora, should not be subjected to as severe drying as the poinsettias.

Amaryllis.

Where an early crop of amaryllis is desired, a batch of these may now be started. If the bulbs are in pots of sufficient size and well established, a liberal top-dressing may suffice. If, on the other hand, the pots are crowded with active roots, they should have a shift. A suitable soil consists of three-fourths fibrous loam, with all the finer particles screened, one-fourth well rotted cow manure and sufficient sharp sand and broken charcoal to keep the whole porous and sweet. When starting them, stand them on a bench if possible, under which steam or hot water pipes run. They like some bottom heat. In Europe the common practice is to plunge the pots in tan bark or other such materials. This is unnecessary, although it is an excellent plan to adopt with the plants all through the growing season. Seedlings should not be rested until after they have flowered. Keep them growing in an average temperature of 60 degrees. If a portion of bench can be planted with them, they will make bigger bulbs and flower earlier than when kept in pots.

Hydrangeas.

Where hydrangea plants were well ripened, with the wood of a nice nutty brown color, and all leaves have fallen, it is now safe to start a batch if they are wanted for Easter. Do not make the blunder, which we still hear of from time to time, of pruning the plants when starting them. No deciduous shrubs for forcing should be pruned if you want any flowers, but there are still quite a number who seem to have a peculiar fondness for shearing shrubs into shape, both outdoors and indoors. To any such we would say, if you must prune, let it be after and not before flowering.

Do not start the hydrangeas too warm; 50 to 55 degrees is ample. They will stand 10 degrees more heat when the flower heads show. As they are thirsty subjects, see that they are never allowed to become dry.

Ten Weeks' Stocks.

Make a sowing of ten weeks' stocks now if you will have any bare benches to devote to them for a spring crop. They are better sellers at Memorial day than Easter, but the average country florist can always find use for them. Sow in shallow flats of light soil. Cover the surface with fine sand. Do not start in a high temperature; 55 degrees is sufficient. When the seedlings have made their second pair of leaves, pot them off singly. Some growers leave them in the pots until they can see which will come double. It is a much better plan to plant them out before they become too much potbound. If good seed is bought, a large percentage is bound to come double, and the singles can be pulled out as they appear. Stocks grow best in a cool house; 45 degrees at night suits them. If kept 10 degrees higher, they become spindling and are less satisfactory.

Gladioli.

The large bulbed gladioli are now well ripened, and early varieties, such as Augusta, Snow White, Shakespeare, May, etc., can be planted in benches either as a separate crop or, as is often done, scattered among other crops, or used to fill up gaps. We advise against the too early planting of these gladioli. Some varieties, if not given a sufficient rest, will start to grow vigorously and throw up what promise to be strong flower stalks, but which produce naught but foliage. This is particularly true of the mixed Gandavensis hybrids or any sorts which do not mature their bulbs early, such as the sorts named.

Do not omit a good batch of that best selling of all large flowered gladioli, America. The bulbs are now within the reach of all, and no one can go far wrong in planting a liberal lot of it.

Mignonette.

With the shortening days and the arrival of steadily cold weather, the mignonette spikes show a steady improvement. The benches are now well filled with roots and should never be allowed to approach dryness. A mulching of finely broken up cow manure, spread thinly over the beds or benches, will keep the surface soil moist and attract feeding roots. Liquid manure is liable to do more harm than good this early in the winter. Better wait until the days lengthen perceptibly before applying it, and even then let the doses be moderate ones. An average minimum temperature of 40 degrees will suit mignonette to a nicety.

Adiantums.

Adiantums in pots will require abundant water supplies now, when so much fire heat is being used. A single drying out would probably mean the loss of many fronds. Where the plants are growing over heating pipes, the benches should be frequently damped. Plants from which the fronds have been cut pretty clean are benefited by a rest before potting and starting them up again. Comparative dryness at the root for five to six weeks will cause them to start with increased vigor. Look out for snails, which will soon work havoc among the fronds. Lay traps of fresh cabbage and lettuce leaves or hollowed-out halves of potatoes, and examine them twice a day for the pests.

Asparagus Sprengeri.

The present is a good time to make a sowing of Asparagus Sprengeri. It takes about a year to produce nice, salable 3-inch pots, and when these are purchasable at such low prices as many firms offer them, it hardly pays the small grower to raise them. There is no skill needed to start seedlings of either A. Sprengeri or plumosus nanus. Flats of sandy loam in a moist, warm house, 65 to 70 degrees at night, are suitable to sow in. When young Sprengeri can be bought at 75 cents per hundred from flats and at $4 to $5 per hundred in 3-inch pots, it will pay the small grower better to devote his bench space to bedding plants, such as geraniums, which in half the time will net double the money, and leave the raising of the asparagus to the big specialists.

MARGUERITES.

At the establishment of the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co., Bakerstown, Pa., there are two benches of yellow and white Marguerites. They are perpetual blooming, great croppers and quite profitable when they do well, but they are difficult to grow. Mr. Burki has them in narrow, trough-like boxes set crosswise on the benches, and 18-inch spaces between the boxes. Too much root room or overfeeding means overgrowth and no blossoms.

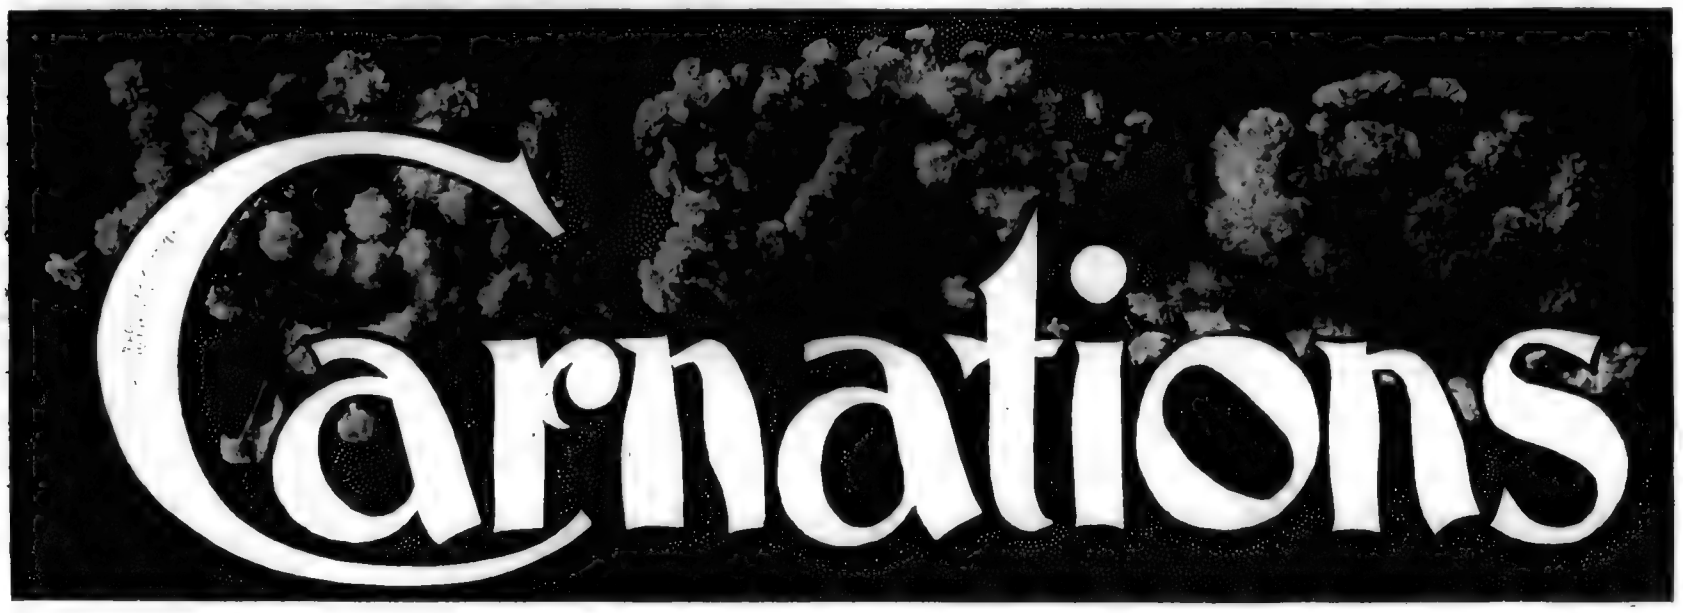
THE HARRIS STORE.

Joseph Harris & Bro., at Shamokin, Pa., have recently erected a new building for their own use. It is 22x70 feet, with store on the street floor and living apartments above. The location is one of the best in town and the improvement has resulted in a large increase in their business. The building is of reinforced concrete, finished in white sand and white cement.

Harris & Bro. were one of the first firms in the trade to put in concrete benches in their greenhouses. They built the first of these benches in 1901 and now have nothing else in their establishment. They say that after having had experience of some years with 5,000 or 6,000 feet of concrete benches, they would not think of using anything else and believe it would pay any florist to adopt the permanent construction. They say they have erected their indestructible benches at about the cost of wood benches, not figuring labor, simply the cost of materials.



TAXATION OF FLORISTS' STOCK.

It is reported that the board of assessors of Framingham, Mass., has adopted measures for the taxation of the stock of florists in that city. In Framingham, as in many of the smaller towns of the commonwealth where the florists' business is carried on, no tax has heretofore been levied upon the stock carried. In some of the larger places, it is said, taxes have been levied. It is said that in Framingham the campaign inaugurated by the assessors will extend, also, to the stock of the nurseries.

Supervisors from the office of the state tax commissioner have visited Framingham and have sanctioned, if not actually directed, the taxation of the stock carried by florists. The assessors of other towns are also said to be moving in the same direction. In some instances the florists' stock is especially valuable, as in that of John T. Butterworth, who is well known as a grower and exhibitor of rare orchid plants.

Another phase of the situation is the fact that the florists, believing their growing stock is not legally taxable, do not take kindly to this proposed move on the part of the assessors, and some, it is known, have already engaged counsel to act in their behalf and defend their position.

WEBER'S CARNATION HOUSE.

H. J. Weber & Sons Nursery Co., located at Nursery Station, a suburb of St. Louis, this season added a house 25x150 in which they planted Enchantress carnations only. The accompanying illustration is from a photograph made early in December. One of the interesting features of the picture is the side ventilation shown. The house has proven exceptionally well adapted to the purpose for which it was built.

ELEVEN DIVISIONS IN CULTURE.

[The paper by Barney Myers, Lancaster, N. Y., read before the Utica Florists' Club December 2, 1909.]

The growing of carnations we will divide into eleven subjects.

First, propagation.—Have good, clean, gritty sand on a clean bench, cement preferred, as it is less liable to produce fungus. If on wood, clean thoroughly and whitewash with hot lime. Take strong cuttings off the flower stem with a good heel; use none but healthy plants. Insert in the sand about one inch and press firm; water well. With the sand at about 60 degrees and the house at 50 or 52 degrees the cuttings should be rooted in about twenty days. The full secret of getting good stock is in the selection of strong, healthy cuttings, and rooting them in an even temperature, and never letting them wilt.

Second, potting the cuttings.—Your soil should be in just the right condition; that is, moist enough so that when pressed together in the hand it will stay together, but hardly any more. Pot firmly enough so that the soil at the bottom of the pot will hold together.

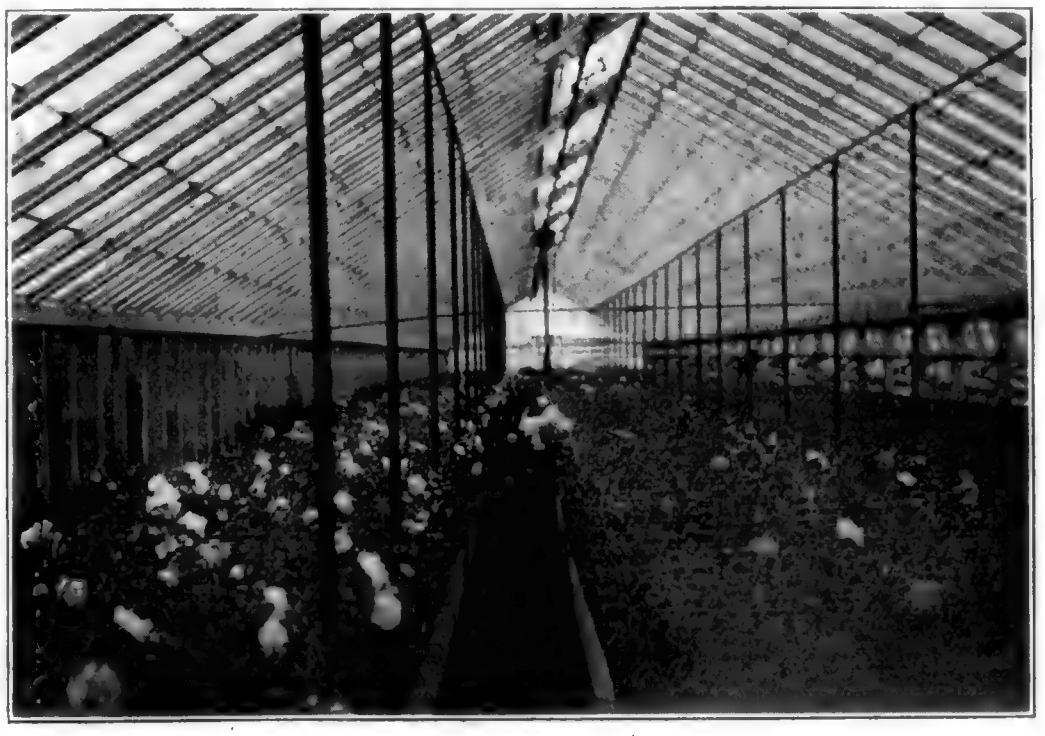
Third, care of the young stock.—The house to keep them in should be light and clean, with a temperature of 50 or 52 degrees at night, with a slight rise in temperature in the daytime. At all times keep the air in the house pure with ventilation. Give water freely, but not too much or it will sour the soil. After seven to nine weeks they will be thoroughly rooted in the 2¼-inch pots, and should be planted out in the benches about three inches apart each way, farther if the room can be spared. Pinch back at least once. From there they go into the field the first week in May, or into the benches, if possible.

Fourth, care of inside-grown stock.—There is little to say except to give lots of water and plenty of cultivation by working up the surface soil every other day, or as often as possible, with plenty of water at all times.

Fifth, field-grown stock.—With us it means nothing but cultivation and two or three pinches back, the last about July 10, until they are brought back inside to plant. We always try to get all plants in the field the first week in May.

Sixth, planting from the field.—First clean your house thoroughly, whitewash your benches, put something on the cracks; we use partly rotted horse manure; have your soil all mixed and ready to put in; if the soil is not just the right consistency, water and leave until it is right before planting. Shade the house with mud or something that will come off easily. Spray lightly until the plants are established. After about ten days remove the shading. All planting should be completed by August 10 or earlier.

Seventh, preparing the soil.—It depends a great deal on the kind of soil you have. The soil we use is a sandy clay loam, to which we add one-eighth cow manure, one-eighth horse manure and a 5-inch pot of bone flour to a wheelbarrow of soil, about two bushels. Mix thoroughly before putting in the benches.



Eighth, care of the plants.—They should at all times be kept free from weeds, disbudded, watered freely but not too much. Spray lightly every bright day until into October, when spraying should be discontinued until spring, unless spider should get in at some point, when of course they must be destroyed.

Ninth, feeding.—After your plants get a good growth it is well to give a little sulphate of potash, one-half pound to 100 square feet of bench, not more. Horse manure water is a good feed. A sprinkling of pulverized sheep manure also is beneficial.

Tenth, insects.—For green fly, aphis and thrips we fumigate as often as possible while the plants are growing, before flowering; afterwards we use one of the forty or forty-five per cent nicotine preparations once a week. For red spider, spray with cold water. If some corner near the heating pipes should get badly infested, use Ivory soap, a 5-cent cake to twenty gallons of water, and thoroughly spray the plants with this; then wash off after twenty-four or thirty-six hours. This is better than most of the insecticides we have tried.

Eleventh, the cutting and keeping of flowers.—Always try to do the cutting in the morning, vase in cold, fresh water and keep in a temperature of 48 degrees twenty-four hours before shipping.

This is the way we have been growing carnations, but on account of the demand for long-stemmed, high grade flowers early in the fall, are we not coming to the growing of them in pots like roses, until they are wanted for the permanent beds, shifting them along in pots to

New Carnation House of H. J. Weber & Sons Co., St. Louis.

5-inch azalea size, then plunging them outdoors in frames until wanted to replace old plants? This would be less expensive to grow than under glass all summer and would permit us to cut through the month of June, when there is a great demand for them, and give us the same results as though they were grown under glass all summer.

WEAK STEMS.

Will you please tell me through the Review the trouble with my carnations? They have weak stems. The flowers are good in size and color, but the stems are so weak they will not hold the bloom up as they should. I would like to know what the trouble is, and what can be done for it. We have a black loam here and it is rich, but I took well decayed sod and put about one-sixth well rotted stable manure and about one quart of hard-wood ashes to a wheelbarrow full of the compost, with a sprinkling of bone meal. The house runs east and west, with another house on the south side, with eighteen inches of glass in the partition wall. I have them on benches with 4-inch tile bottoms and keep the house at 52 degrees at night. I have hot water heat. R. A. R.

Your trouble is most likely caused by the unusually mild weather during November. If November and October had been changed around it would have been better for the carnation growers generally. There is much complaint of soft blooms and weak stems, where special precaution has not been taken to counteract the effects of the mild weather.

Your soil should be all right, judging by your description, though it may be a little light for producing strong stems. The wood ashes you added, however, should have remedied any such defect. It is possible that you have not been liberal enough with the fresh air. Carnations enjoy an abundance of fresh air, providing it does not blow in on the plants at too low a temperature. Nothing will weaken the stems and soften the blooms quicker than a close atmosphere accompanied by liberal watering. If you have done any feeding, it would also aggravate the trouble.

I would suggest that you spray your plants with salt water twice, one week apart. Dissolve a two-inch potful of table salt in three gallons of water and apply with a sprayer. Then follow the above suggestions regarding ventilation and watering. Cooler weather will likely bring relief, for the carnation usually is at its best in all respects in bright, cold days of winter. A. F. J. B.

CUPRUM FOR BLACK SPOT.

I notice in a recent issue of the Review that a writer recommends the cuprum solution as the cure for black spot on roses. Will you please advise me where this solution may be obtained, also what proportion of water to add to it and when to spray to cure or prevent the black spot? I shall be very grateful for your early advice in this matter.

A. G. L.

The copper solution (cuprum) can be had of any dealer in florists' supplies who handles a general line of insecticides. Directions for use accompany each purchase. Ribes.

MILDEW ON ROSES.

Will somebody tell me what is the cause of my roses drying up, as the sample I send you shows? I have been fighting mildew since the first part of October and seem unable to get rid of it. Sulphur seems to check it, but in a few days it is back again as bad as ever. It started on my Brides and Maids and I have had no good flowers at all on either on account of spoiled foliage. I keep a night fireman and a recording thermometer and am sure the temperature is not to blame for much of the trouble, at least, for it has been kept nearly right. The mildew finally spread to my Killarney and a little on Richmond, but Smiths and Perles in the same house are clear of it. I even have two or three Smiths planted in vacant places, where Maids were missing, and while the Maids are full of mildew, there is none whatever on Smiths and Perles, and Richmonds on side benches do not show it. Now the mildew is a little better, but the buds dry up on the outside. It looks to me as if I had used enough sulphur to kill the mildew in a dozen houses. I have used the bellows freely and have used Bordeaux mixture with an additional amount of sulphur and arsenate of lead in it. I also keep a good supply of sulphur painted on the hot water pipes all the time. I use hydrocyanic acid gas to keep down insects and do not believe I use it too strong, as I have used it two years and have never injured any foliage with it.

E. M. H.

As I have frequently pointed out, no amount of sulphur will keep mildew from spreading if conditions in the house are favorable to the germination and growth of this parasite.

While temperatures may be all right, as indicated by recording thermometers, it is clear that some other condition is wrong, as if all conditions are right this amount of sulphur would surely kill mildew.

It appears to me, from the condition of the flowers and foliage, that the house is kept too close and the atmosphere too moist. The blasting of the buds seems to be the result of the hydrocyanic acid gas or some other compound being used too strong.

Keep the day temperature at a maximum of 75 degrees, minimum 60 degrees; night temperature, maximum 59 degrees, minimum 56 degrees. Now, this is the most important part. These temperatures should be maintained with ventilators partly open whenever it is possible. This is one of the points essential to the health of the rose.

Some varieties, because of their lower vitality, are more susceptible to disease than the more robust sorts, and weak plants invariably are the first to be attacked. I think it would also be wise to refrain from using Bordeaux mixture, arsenate of lead, etc., and rely on the fumes of sulphur for efficacy. It is also necessary to bear in mind that the foliage should be dry before sundown, so the syringing should be done early in the day.

If the piping is under the benches, make examination frequently to see if the roots are not suffering from want of moisture. This sometimes happens when the surface of the bench and the upper part of the soil are moist enough.

CARE OF CUT STOCK.

From Greenhouse to Shipping Room.

The greenhouse is an extremely important feature to the grower, but the packing room is just as much so. The first consideration is, of course, to produce the material. But don't you think it just as important to have your consignments arrive in good condition?

Cut stock should not be allowed to remain long in a warm atmosphere, for it soon shows an inclination to wilt. The stock should be placed in a room having a temperature of from 48 to 52 degrees as soon as possible.

At the approach of all holidays a great many of the growers are inclined to save the stock, so that they may be able to meet the increased demand. This system should be done away with, as it does a great deal of harm, for after cut blooms are held thirty-six hours they begin to show the effects, such as weak stems, soft petals and change of color.

Where a great many blooms are spoiled is on the sorting table. In sorting the blooms into different classes, there is a tendency to toss the blooms, instead of laying them down carefully. This is sure to bruise the blooms and therefore depreciate their value.

Packing the Blooms.

Great care should be given each individual bloom, when placed in the shipping box, so that the petals may not be injured and the necks broken.

A roll of tissue paper should be placed between each row, so as to prevent bruising. A good way to pack is to lay four rows, then a sheet of tissue, then two rows over the last two rows in the first tier, another sheet of tissue, then four rows, starting even with the first row in the second tier, and then a cleat wrapped in newspaper to keep the stems from injury. It is essential that the cleat should not be placed too close to the heads of the blooms, for there is danger of breaking the necks.

After the box is packed, cleats should be placed on the inside of the box, at the top, to hold the paper off the blooms.

The paper next the blooms should always be new and clean. This gives the flowers a fresher appearance than if old or soiled paper is used. There should be a sufficient lining of paper to serve as protection from frost.

Destinations should be written plainly and legibly, so that the expressman may have no doubts.

If these precautions are observed they should do a great deal toward eliminating the troubles of the growers.

APPLETON'S EXHIBIT.

At the recent exhibition of the Rhode Island Horticultural Society, William Appleton made an exhibit which attracted much attention because it was the first of its kind to be staged there. Mr. Appleton is one of those florists who has found the handling of certain classes of nursery stock for garden work an important addition to his business. The accompanying illustration shows the exhibit at the recent flower show. Many people were seen making notes of the exhibit, apparently with the idea of purchasing later on.

PENTECOST'S POINSETTIAS.

The accompanying illustration is reproduced from a photograph taken in one of the houses of S. N. Pentecost, Cleveland, O. It shows the crop of poinsettias he is marketing this week. The plants were propagated about July 15 and the house was planted August 17. The average height is now three and one-half feet and the bracts run from twelve inches to eighteen inches in diameter. It is as successful a crop of poinsettias as Mr. Pentecost ever has grown and the orders booked before Christmas indicated a satisfactory market.

AUGUSTA, GA.—Fire destroyed the office, workroom, one greenhouse and damaged parts of two others, at the establishment of Henry W. T. Balk, 226 Green street, December 13. The loss on the buildings is fully covered by insurance, but a fine lot of blooming plants, palms, araucarias, etc., was lost, on which there was no insurance. However, Mr. Balk reports that he still has plenty of stock to take care of his Christmas orders.

SOME OF THE NEW PLANTS.

[A paper by J. S. Wilson, read before the Iowa state Horticultural Society, at Des Moines, December 8, 1909.]

You have asked me to prepare a paper on the plants of recent introduction that are worthy of trial. I am not competent to handle this subject as it should be handled, but will do the best I can and give you the experience I have had with the few new plants I have bought.

We all know that every year there are a great many new plants offered us, many of which we do not hear much of a year or two hence. It is hard for the average small florist to know what is worthy and really an improvement over existing sorts. I have not bought by any means all the new things that have been offered us in glowing descriptions in the last three or four years, and it is just possible I have missed some of the best things. Some of the plants I mention here are not strictly what might be called new by some, having been introduced three years ago or more; however, you must admit it takes about two years' tryout before one can really condemn a novelty.

Some Newer Roses.

The most recent introduction I have is the White Killarney rose, introduced to the trade last spring. I saw this rose exhibited at a number of flower shows during the year previous to sending it out, and made up my mind it was a good thing. I planted up last May 1,000 2½-inch plants, and by August 1 was cutting roses in quantity. The plants have kept up the same pace ever since. I believe White Killarney in time will displace Bride, as it will give more first-class blooms to the square foot of space than that old-time favorite, besides bringing a better price, which makes you win at both ends. I also believe that, like Killarney, it will prove a good summer rose, both for indoor and outdoor blooming. White Killarney has come to stay and will be more largely grown next year, when better known by the average florists.

Other good roses, although not strictly new, having been introduced about three or four years ago, that I have found valuable for pot culture are Tausendschon, Hiawatha, La Fiamma and White Baby Rambler.

Tausendschon, I think, is one of the most beautiful roses of recent introduction. It is a hardy climber of the rambler type. The flowers are about the same size as in Clothilde Soupert. The color is light pink, changing to carmine, shading lighter towards the center. It blooms in clusters of six to ten flowers each, the individual flowers having three to four inches of stems, which gives the cluster a loose, airy appearance. Another, and I think an important feature, is that the flowers hold on for weeks after opening. For forcing for Easter and early spring sales it is grand.

Hiawatha and La Fiamma are both hardy climbers and are of the Wichuraiana type. I have grown these two roses, that is, forcing them, for the last three years, and must say that for grace and beauty, when well done, they are hard to excel. The flowers of both these varieties are single and about two inches in diameter, forming large clusters which almost cover the plants. Usually we look for a single rose to drop its petals soon after opening, but not so with these roses; in fact, they do not drop, but dry up like a bunch of shavings and must be removed as they begin to lose color. The Hiawatha color is deep crimson, with the petals shading to pure white at the base. La Fiamma is carmine pink, shading to white and light pink in the center.

House of Poinsettias Grown by S. N. Pentecost.

By White Baby Rambler I do not mean Schnewitchen or Catherine Zeimet, which are also called white Baby Ramblers and catalogued as such by some firms. In the White Baby Rambler I refer to, the flowers are borne in clusters of fifty to seventy-five individual flowers one inch in diameter, double to the center and pure snow white. It has the same habit of growth and is just as hardy as the red Baby Rambler. I have found it a good seller at Easter.

Other New Plants.

Gladiolus America and Mrs. Francis King are two I have found of real merit and selected by the retail trade in preference to all others, and at a much better price.

Hydrangea arborescens grandiflora alba is a new hardy hydrangea introduced to the trade about three years ago. It has proved valuable for outdoor planting. One of its most valuable characteristics is its coming into bloom the last part of June, just after the passing of all the early spring shrubs, and continuing until early September. Form and size of flowers are much like Hydrangea Hortensia, only of a pure white. I have never been successful in forcing in pots, although I believe it has been done.

There are many new chrysanthemums, carnations, cannas, etc., introduced every year, as you all know. I try a number of new ones every year, and as this is a large subject, I will not dwell on it, but leave that for someone else.

I have mentioned in this paper only such plants of recent introduction as have proved valuable to me. I have tried a great many more, and some that did not prove of value, but that part I will forget and continue to buy all novelties which appeal to me as improvements over existing sorts. I would recommend all florists to do likewise.

FLORIST TO KING LEOPOLD.

It will interest readers of the Review to know that the late Henry Lee Knight, father of Thomas Knight, of Knight & Struck, New York city, was until his death, eleven years ago, superintendent and manager of the estates of the late King Leopold in Brussels, Laeken, Ciergnon (Luxemburg) and Ostend for seventeen consecutive years.

He had under his direct supervision over 1,200 men, which involved considerable responsibility, owing to the fact that each estate was separated from the others by a distance of several hours' railroading, with the exception of the Laeken estate, which is a country suburb of Brussels.

Under his care a range of glass, calling for an expenditure of over 500,000 francs, was erected, and the palm house contained—and contains today—one of the choicest collections of palms and tree ferns in existence. This house had fabulous dimensions, being over 150 feet in height. The other houses contained flowering plants. One interesting feature about this range was the palm house church or chapel. In other words, one of the recent conservatories was built for the holding of the king's devotional services, where Monsignor Sinion at that time was the dean to His Majesty. It is said that there is not a finer collection of hardy roses in existence than here, for it was a regular thing for Mr. Knight to buy anything that was new in this line, these being the king's favorite flowers.

Mr. Knight's position has been vacant ever since, for some reason or other, although the place has been managed by several "chef de cultures," or department managers, in different sections.

Thomas Knight, the son, says that as a boy he was fond of King Leopold, and, as far as he can recollect, the king always treated him with kindness and was quite genial. As a matter of fact, the king used to come over to the "Farm" where the Knights lived, and one day, as he was accustomed to ride a tricycle, he asked Thomas, then a boy of 12, if he would care to try the machine. "Well, Sire," said the young man, "I am sorry my legs are too short to tackle it."

Before holding this position, the senior Mr. Knight was head gardener to the Right Hon. Smith, of Henley on Thames, London, and also to the Duchess of Roxburgh, at Kelso, Scotland. Under him several gardeners, in prominent positions in this country today, worked at that time. The young Duke of Roxburgh married Miss Goelet, of Newport, R. I.

NOTES FROM ENGLAND.

Horticultural Societies.

There has been a decided atmosphere of horticulture in London this week. All sections of the trade have been in evidence in Horticultural hall, in the streets, in the hotels and in the theaters. From the far north and from the south, even from Guernsey, all ranks have come together to attend general meetings, to receive the reports for 1909 and to prepare plans for 1910. The outlook is particularly bright as far as pertains to the societies devoted to the rose, the sweet pea and the carnation.

National Fruit Growers' Association.

A meeting was held on Monday, December 6, when a considerable amount of routine business was transacted, the land question and railway rates coming in for discussion.

Royal Horticultural Society.

The usual fortnightly show was held December 7. Chrysanthemums were well represented. Mrs. W. Parker, a beautiful blush single from F. Brazier, gained an award of merit, and Kathleen May, from H. J. Jones, Lewisham, was similarly honored. This variety will probably become popular for market, its most striking feature being its yellow anemone center, surrounded by several rows of large, reflexed, crimson petals. Wells & Co., Merstham, staged a fine display of Japanese and single varieties. Cypripedium Lion, from Sander & Sons, St. Albans, received an award of merit.

An extensive and most interesting collection of well grown vegetables was shown by Sutton & Sons, Reading. It included many varieties rarely seen. Splendid types of cabbages, Brussels sprouts, savoys and kales were shown and the collection was awarded a silver Knightian medal.

Perpetual Flowering Carnation Society.

The annual winter show was held December 8 and was quite up to its usual standard. The hall was gay with a decorated temple of carnations in the center, from Stuart Low & Co., Bush Hill Park, bowers of carnations from several growers and grand collections.

The richest and most comprehensive display was made by C. Engelmann, Saffron Walden, and a gold medal was awarded. It contained about 1,600 blooms. A fine bank of Carola formed the centerpiece and there were good vases of May Day, Viola, Superior, O. P. Bassett, Wanoka, Ruby, Apple Blossom and many other popular varieties.

Silver gilt medals were awarded to collections from W. H. Page, Hampton, and H. Burnett, Guernsey. Silver medals were awarded to Young & Co., Cheltenham, Stuart Low & Co., and Cutbush & Sons, London. Blackmore & Langdon, Bath, secured the only award of merit given to a new variety, for their novelty Mary Vilven.

The American Society challenge cup was awarded to Bell & Sheldon, Guernsey, in the class for three vases of American novelties distributed since January 1, 1907. They put up Winona, May Day and Pink Delight. H. F. Mason, Hampton, came next, with May Day, Pink Delight and Ruby.

The president's challenge cup was retained by C. F. Raphael's gardener.

In the class for the best group of cut carnations the gold medal was awarded to C. F. Waters, who had five vases of White Enchantress, Mrs. Burnett, Britannia, Winsor, Harry Fenn, Aurora, Mikado, Victory, Rose Dore, Pink Delight, etc., and the silver medal was awarded to S. Mortimer, who put up Winsor, Nelson Fisher, Rose Dore, Mrs. Burnett and Enchantress.

The society's silver gilt medal for the best vase in the show went to a fine exhibit of Britannia from Bell & Sheldon.

In the color classes, W. H. Lancashire, D. M. Collins and C. Engelmann put up the best vases of whites, all three showing White Perfection. For blush or pink, Bell & Sheldon were first with Winona, W. H. Lancashire and D. M. Collins following with Enchantress. W. H. Lancashire was first in the rose or salmon class, with Rose Dore, followed by A. F. Dutton and Bell & Sheldon. For deep pink or cerise, Bell & Sheldon were first with Afterglow, followed by W. H. Lancashire with Lawson, and C. Engelmann with Afterglow. For crimson W. H. Lancashire was first with President; second, C. Engelmann with Carola; third, A. Smith with Union Jack. For scarlet, Britannia from Bell & Sheldon led, then Robert Craig from W. H. Lancashire, followed by Britannia from C. Engelmann.

The prizes were well contested for in all the classes, over forty in number, of which the foregoing were the principal.

In the evening the members dined together in the Hotel Windsor. After the usual toasts had been duly honored, the general meeting was held. The reports showed the society to be in a prosperous condition.

The officers were reëlected, namely: Chairman, J. S. Brunton; vice-chairman, S. Mortimer; secretary, Hayward Mathies, Lucerne, Stubbington, Fareham, England; treasurer, L. J. Cook; exhibition superintendent, E. F. Haines. W. H. Page was elected chairman of the floral committee. The society's year book will be published early in January.

National Rose Society.

The annual general meeting was held December 9. The balance sheet shows a credit of over £1,000 and a membership of 4,000.

Tomato Trials of the Livingston Seed Co.

Page Roberts was reëlected chairman, E. Mewley secretary, and G. W. Cook treasurer.

One of the special features of the gathering was the presentation of the first Dean Hole memorial medal to Rev. T. Pemberton, in recognition of his conspicuous services as a rosarian, his success in exhibitions and his literary works on the rose.

National Sweet Pea Society.

The annual general meeting was held December 10, followed by the annual dinner and a conference on sweet peas, at which the discussions were opened by William Cuthbertson, on "The Imperfect Seeding of Waved Sweet Peas," and by W. J. Unwin, on "Sweet Pea Names and Naming." The report shows a membership of 938 and over 100 affiliated societies.

In the past a one-day's show has usually been held in London. In 1910 the show will be a two-days' show, to be held July 12 and 13.

The trials will be continued and arrangements are being made for a more extensive and conclusive test of varieties than has been possible hitherto. The trials will be conducted at the Times Experimental Station, Ladygrove Farm, near Guildford, and will be conducted by Charles Foster, to whom novelties (not less than fifteen seeds) should be sent before January 15. The charge is 2 shillings and 6 pence on each variety. At the request of seed merchants, trials will also be made for the purpose of testing the correctness and purity of stocks. For this test, not less than twenty-four seeds must be sent and the charge is 5 shillings. A special committee will investigate the various diseases to which sweet peas are liable.

N. N. Sherwood, of Hurst & Son, London, was elected president for 1910; E. Sherwood, treasurer; Commander Humphrey, chairman of committee; C. H. Curtis, Adelaide Road, Brentford, Middlesex, secretary.

Royal Botanic Society.

The one exception to the encouraging reports is that of the Royal Botanic Society. There are rumors of amalgamation with the Royal Horticultural Society, and joint conferences are at present being arranged with a view to bringing this about on a basis suitable to each society. There are many difficulties in the way and no one can forecast the result.

The Seed Trade.

Concurrent with the foregoing, the seed merchants have had a busy time during the whole of the week in Agricultural hall, showing their specimen grains and seeds for 1910, as well as large exhibits of seed potatoes, and the produce of their 1909 crops in the shape of giant mangels, turnips, cabbages, etc. Reports are varied as to the amount of business transacted on this occasion, owing to the ruling prices being so high.

The principal exhibitors were J. Carter & Co., London; Sutton & Sons, Reading; Webb & Sons, Stourbridge; E. W. King & Co., Coggeshall; Harrison & Sons, Leicester, and John K. King & Sons, Coggeshall. BEE.

TOMATO TRIALS.

Tomatoes always have been the specialty of the Livingston Seed Co., Columbus, and it is probable that the firm each year conducts the most extensive tomato trials which are carried on in the United States. Last season they had trials of more than 250 different lots of seeds of the standard varieties and, besides, they had nearly 100 different varieties of seedlings. These latter were all grown staked up, but of the 250 trials of standard varieties part were staked and part were grown in the regular fashion, with the plants spreading all over the ground. In the accompanying illustration a corner of the Livingston tomato trials is shown. The rows in the foreground of the picture are Livingston's Globe, Hummer, Coreless, Magnus, Beauty and some others of the important standard sorts.

IMPERIAL GLASS CO. A GO.

The Imperial Window Glass Co., the combination of independents or handmade window glass manufacturers, has at last become a reality, after the promoters have been struggling for more than a year to organize it. Final steps of the consolidation, affecting firms and plants valued at $6,000,000, were taken at a meeting of directors last week.

A practical monopoly of the American market is assured the combine because of the strike in the plants of the American Window Glass Co., which by the use of machines produces one-third of the country's supply. Promoters of the new concern declare that almost three-fourths of the independents were on the verge of bankruptcy.

In spite of denials that the purpose of the organization is to boost prices, rates have been raised twice, five per cent each time, since the consolidation project gave promise of success early in October. Only six of the hand-make plants in the country remain outside of the corporation. Two of these are in western Pennsylvania, one in West Virginia and one in Ohio. All are expected to come within the fold within a few weeks.

All plants concerned have been assessed at the rate of $100 to each pot. As 2,200 plants of 2,400 have come into the company, the amount raised to launch the company will be $220,000.

The active officers are: President, Myron L. Case, Bowling Green, O.; treasurer, J. G. Sayre, Columbus, O.; secretary and sales agent, J. R. Johnston, Indianapolis, Ind. M. J. Healey, of Bradford, is vice-president, and there are fifteen members of the board of directors.

BURKI'S ASPARAGUS.

Fred Burki grows an immense quantity of asparagus, both Sprengeri and plumosus, at the Bakerstown plant of the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co., and he has a limited quantity of elongatus. But the latter is simply an experiment; cannot yet tell if there is a market for it. One house largely filled with Sprengeri is 19x350 feet. The benches are raised, and have five inches of soil, with a surface dressing of rotted manure. When he first grew Sprengeri there was scarcely any market for it in Pittsburg and he had to sell it in Chicago, but now all he has is sold at home. His plumosus house is 40x350 feet and in it are five benches. The soil is ten inches deep on tile bottoms, but the tiles are six inches apart. The temperature is 60 degrees at night and 70 degrees during the day.

He saves his own seed and from this raises a fresh stock of plants every year. He grows them on in pots for a year, then plants them out in beds, two beds a year. He keeps his plants until they are four years old, but no longer, for after that the old plants produce too many long, naked stems to be profitable. He throws out the two oldest beds each year and plants two new ones, thus keeping up a full crop and succession of paying vines. The young plants branch from the bottom up. WM. FALCONER.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Appointment of Committees.

President Valentine has appointed John K. M. L. Farquhar, of Boston, as chairman of a committee on Federation and Affiliation of Amateur Societies. This appointment is made in pursuance of a recommendation by President Valentine at Cincinnati, and endorsed and ordered put into effect by vote of the society.

W. N. RUDD, Sec'y.

ROCKLAND, ME.—Charles T. Spear has fitted up his flower store, opposite the establishment of the Burpee Furniture Co.

ARDMORE, OKLA.—Schuman is fitting up his office building on West Main street and in a few days will have for sale all kinds of cut flowers and ferns.

MORRISON, ILL.—The coal famine is so serious along the line of the Northwestern railroad that florists are seizing the railroad's coal here to tide them over until the road brings in their own.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Christmas is in the air and everything points to a splendid trade. The weather has been ideal of late and nothing but a spell of untoward climatic conditions can prevent business during the present week being about the best on record. Plant growers are already well cleaned out and although prices on these show little change from preceding years, the demand is far better and a general feeling of optimism, such as was lacking a year ago, prevails.

In cut flowers trade, as is customary during the two or three weeks preceding Christmas, has been quiet and arrivals have been fewer than usual. At the first of the week prices were hardening all around and the supply of flowers promised to be none too great. In roses, best grade Beauties were up to $9 per dozen and will probably bring $12 later in the week. The finest Richmond are likely to bring $5 and $6 per dozen, with $2.50 and $3 as top notch on Killarney. Short-stem flowers are now bringing $4 without any trouble. Bride and Maid move poorly, compared with other varieties.

Carnations are selling well; even whites make $3 and $4, with fancies at $5 and $6. Reds and crimsons are, as usual, in best demand, but all colored varieties sell at good prices. Violets have been scarce of late, probably due to the holding back process. The prevailing rates are $1 to $1.25, but the best will sell higher later in the week. Lilies and callas remain about the same. Chrysanthemums are mostly of small or medium size; only a small number of sizable flowers will be left for the holidays. Some nice marguerites are coming in, also small lots of freesias and yellow narcissi. Gardenias are rather more plentiful. The cattleya scarcity is relieved by arrivals of C. Trianæ, in addition to C. Percivaliana. There is a good sale for asparagus, smilax and all kinds of ferns.

Business in Christmas greenery is remarkably good and dealers in these staples are rushed to the limit. Holly is mostly well berried and mistletoe, both native and imported, is fine. Wreathing of all kinds is in big demand. The almost entire absence of snow hitherto has been favorable for a big output of native greenery.

Club Meeting.

Coming, as it did, so near Christmas, it was feared the attendance December 21 would suffer, but such did not prove to be the case, there being a rousing gathering. The election of officers by the Australian ballot system resulted as follows:

President—J. W. Duncan.
Vice-president—Peter Miller.
Secretary—W. N. Craig.
Treasurer—Edward Hatch.
Executive committee—J. P. A. Guerineau, W. E. Fischer, H. E. Fiske, Thomas Pegler.

Peter Fisher, one of the candidates for executive committee, withdrew his name, he already having served one or two terms and wishing to give others a show.

The proposed taxation of florists' crops under glass came up for discussion and the club will do whatever is possible to remove this threatened burden. Several members said that if enacted it would mean putting them out of business. Prof. E. A. White, of the Amherst Agricultural College, outlined the short winter course in practical floriculture, which will be given during the present winter, with lectures by many well known specialists.

There was a goodly display of exhibits on the tables. Eber Holmes, from the Montrose Greenhouses, had a fine collection of roses, including both new and old varieties. W. N. Craig showed a collection of winter flowering zonal geraniums, including such varieties as Paul Crampel, Jacquerie, Pamela, Emile Zola, Tom McLaren and Mrs. Brown Potter, as well as several new English sorts. Peter Fisher brought fine May Day carnation. D. Finlayson had a splendid collection of calanthes and F. W. Fletcher showed lopezia.

It was announced that January 18 would be installation night, with a stereopticon lecture by E. H. Wilson on his plant-collecting travels in western China, and that January 27 would come the annual banquet and dance. Several new members were elected. Some queries from the question box were answered and refreshments were served as usual before the meeting closed.

Various Notes.

A. Roper is picking some extra fine flowers from his new scarlet seedling carnation, William Penn.

E. MacMulkin's Christmas window in scarlet is, as usual, exceedingly attractive. Among other flowering plants, he has some extra fine bougainvilleas.

Welch Bros. are handling an enormous amount of material at present, and in both greenery, flowers and plants their shipping trade is likely to break all records.

Peter Fisher has a new cerise seedling carnation, which he thinks highly of, also an extra fine variegated, like Mrs. G. M. Bradt in color.

J. Newman & Sons, on Tremont row, have their windows artistically arranged. Their azaleas are extra fine and all other pot plants equally good.

The threatened taxation of florists' growing crops is rousing growers all over the state. In Framingham the various florists are strongly banded together and have refused to give tax assessors any information. They have also retained legal counsel. Similar moves are being made all over the state. Private estates, it is stated, will be exempt. Growers in every part of the state should prepare themselves for the fight when it comes, as it undoubtedly will. If florists' brains are to be taxed, it would almost seem as if crops of strawberries and many other market garden crops could hardly be made exempt. In some of the larger cities, including Boston, the tax on growing crops under glass has previously been levied, but this is the first time it has been carried into the smaller cities and country towns.

Thomas Pegler is handling an unusually high grade of carnations from George E. Buxton at the Park street market.

Waban Conservatories have a grand cut of high grade Beauties, Killarneys, White Killarneys and Richmonds for the holidays.

The F. W. Fletcher Co. has a good lot of Cattleya labiata for Christmas. These were purchased late and by flowering two months after their usual time are specially valuable.

W. C. Ward, the pansy specialist, is sending in quantities of his specialty at present. He also hopes to be cutting dahlias all winter, Jack Rose being his specialty.

W. B. Goodenow, of Stoughton, is cutting some fine sweet peas. N. F. Comley also has a fine crop for the holidays.

Esty Bros. have an unusually fine lot of double violets, in the culture of which they are specially successful.

From the big Budlong establishment at Auburn, R. I., some fine Richmond, Killarney, White Killarney and My Maryland are coming at present.

W. N. Craig.

EVANSVILLE, IND.

The Market.

We are having an unusually cold December, while we had an exceptionally warm November. Stock has been plentiful, especially roses, until this cold spell set in, but there is now a scarcity in all lines, with prospects of continuing so; consequently prices are soaring. Plants of all kinds are in fairly good supply and indications are that all will be sold.

Various Notes.

Julius Niednagel & Sons have a large supply of seasonable plants for their Christmas trade. Roses and carnations here are looking well, though they are off crop.

William Blackman Floral Co. has put into service a fine new funeral wagon. It is about twelve feet long and has plate glass windows, 2x6 feet, on each side. It is a new departure for a florist in this city.

Ben Kramer, thinking business was going to be slow for Christmas, took orders for several hundred holly wreaths, and now he is in for it, as he says that indications are for a big trade for the holidays and he will have all he can do. He has laid in a fine stock of plants, especially a fine lot of Boston ferns, and there is a good demand for them.

Otto Kuebler, at Newburg, is growing his azaleas and they are coming just right for Christmas.

Louis Fritsch has opened a store on the west side. He has taken over a half store, and if trade is satisfactory he will enlarge. There seems to be no reason why he should not do well, as this side of town is growing rapidly. So far, his business has been quite satisfactory.

Austin Wallace is having a nice cut of sweet peas.

Nellie Goodge is expecting a large business. Her carnations are in crop and a nice lot of lilies were seen. She has a good supply of plants and Roman hyacinths in plenty. Holly wreaths are a specialty with her.

Royston & Fenton say that calls for roses and carnations are heavy and that they will not have anywhere near enough to go around.

E. L. F.

MILWAUKEE.

The Market.

Business last week was fair, considering that the weather continued severe and that folks do not spend much money for flowers the week before Christmas. The cloudy weather which lasted from November 31 to December 16 has shortened receipts considerably. The last few days of sunshine will help considerably to increase the supply for the holidays. Prospects are that roses will be equal to demand, while in carnations there may be a shortage. Bouquet green, ground pine and the like are scarce. Holly is equal to demand and of good quality.

Various Notes.

John Bourgaise, of Racine, met with quite a painful accident last week. While unloading a crate of pots he made a false step, thus putting the whole weight on his right leg, breaking it in two places.

There is great rejoicing at the Wm. Manke home in North Milwaukee, not caused by the Christmas man, but by the stork, which left a bouncing boy December 18.

C. C. Pollworth Co. reports being all sold out on Christmas plants by December 19.

The Holton & Hunkel Co. was right in it on Beauties and tea roses for Christmas. They, too, report being cleaned out of pot plants early in the week.

Nic Zweifel says the long dark spell reduced his cut in carnations at least fifty per cent. E. O.

GLEN COVE, N. Y.

The Nassau County Horticultural Society held its regular monthly meeting in Pembroke hall, Wednesday, December 8, with President Everett in the chair. Members turned out in force to elect their officers for the ensuing year. Treasurer E. J. Brown, in submitting his annual report, gave a satisfactory account of the financial standing of the society. Secretary Gaut read a letter from J. F. Huss, one of the judges at the fall show, complimenting the society on the magnificent exhibition held last October.

The points competition ended with P. Ruel well in the lead, with a vase of gardenias which was awarded 91⅔ points. V. Cleres and G. Wilson exhibited Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, which were awarded 89 and 85⅓ respectively. P. Ruel was awarded the gold medal, with an aggregate of 1,054⅓ points; V. Cleres, silver medal, 1,035⅔; and G. Wilson, bronze medal, 1,031⅓. V. Cleres was awarded cultural certificate for vase of carnations. A. Reidenbach, P. Reul, and H. Macdonald were each awarded honorable mention for nice exhibits.

T. B. Bell, P. Somers, H. Macdonald, R. Robinson, R. Cartwright and J. MacIntosh were elected to active membership.

The officers elected for the coming year are: President, James Duthie; vice-president, E. Reidenbach; treasurer, E. J. Brown; recording secretary, J. Ingram; corresponding secretary, Oscar Ador; executive committee, G. Wilson, V. Cleres, J. Everett, E. Barton, H. Gaut, W. Eccles and J. Robinson. J. F. Johnston was elected trustee for three years.

A committee was appointed to make arrangements for the annual dinner and was ordered to report at the next meeting.

A. Mackenzie, J. Holloway and J. Duthie acted as judges at this meeting.

SPARTA, WIS.—The greenhouses which Z. K. Jewett & Co. have erected during the present year, in place of those partly destroyed by fire, are a marked improvement over the former ones in structure and facilities.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

(Other Pacific Coast News, pages 48 and 49.)

The heavy frosts have done great injury on low ground. Beans, tomatoes and some other vegetables have suffered even worse than carnations, as the vegetables are killed outright. In the foothills the frost did not do much damage. As such heavy frosts do not occur every year, growers have to take their chances.

Hampton's Cucumber Range.

Duvall Hampton is the only grower of cucumbers under glass in this part of California. The writer paid a visit to his plant, in Hollywood, on Sunday, December 12, and found everything in the most promising condition. He has five houses, 200 feet long, all filled with cucumber plants, with not a sign of disease to be seen. They had just begun to pick, having several boxes ready for market. One variety will run forty-eight to the box; another and larger variety, of his own originating, runs only thirty to the box.

Fruits and vegetables in California are sold by the pound or in standard boxes. Baskets are rarely seen.

Mr. Hampton uses oil for heating, using 10,000 to 15,000 gallons in a season. No heat is necessary through the day, except in rainy weather, as the sun gives sufficient heat.

Mr. Hampton has large lemon and orange groves, which look exceedingly well cared for and are hanging full of fruit.

Various Notes.

Since Sunday funerals have been abolished, Monday always finds all the florists busy with funeral work. At The American Florists', where many designs and bunches were being made up, there was an exceptionally beautiful double spray of violets and maidenhair, tied with gauze of the same shade. It was about four feet in length and 2,700 violets were used in it. A car of eastern holly was seen here. It always brings a good price.

At Wright's Flower Shop a couple of imported holly trees, well berried, added to the attractiveness of the store. Besides other designs, a beautiful wreath of violets and Paper Whites and a large wreath of galax and Beauties were seen.

At The Angelus, among other pieces, a pillow of violets was being made.

The Los Angeles Floral Co., consisting of L. Curtett and J. Guillemot, at 316 West Seventh street, has had an excellent business ever since opening its store in November.

At the Elks' memorial service Sunday, December 12, the Majestic theater was beautifully decorated. The stage was arranged to represent the Elks' lodge room. Palms and white chrysanthemums were used elaborately everywhere, with a hedge of white chrysanthemums in the front of the stage. As the house was darkened a curtain rose, revealing a huge white cross, to which was clinging the white-robed figure of a woman, Miss Stoddard, of the Dramatic School. As the names of the departed members were called, a tiny electric light flashed out, until, when the last of the seventy-nine names had been called, the cross was a blaze of light. Slowly the lights faded away, until there was only the outline of the woman and the cross.

Herbert Lowe, of Long Beach, had the decoration for the Elks' memorial service at that place. The church in which it was held was quite elaborately decorated with potted plants and flowers. A large elk's head, filled with white sweet peas, with a collar of violets outlined by small electric lights, with purple electric lights used for the eyes, was very effective. An illuminated Elks' clock, indicating the eleventh hour, was one of the features. Mr. Lowe has an attractive store on Pine avenue, near the ocean, and does a thriving business. His nurseries are at Alamitos. All of the flowers on his carnation plants in the field were ruined by the frost. Those in the houses are looking well. Mrs. Hatch, his popular saleswoman, is away on a vacation.
S. A. C.

PORTLAND, ORE.

The Market.

Business conditions for the week ending December 18 were exceedingly good. Carnations are of fine quality and realize top prices. Roses are somewhat scarce, the cold, snowy weather retarding the crop, but indications are for a good cut later. Mums are not an overflow; only the choice grades are to be had. Violets are in great demand. Valley is to be had in limited quantities. Callas are coming in slowly and always bring good prices.

Funeral work has been quite brisk, but the scarcity of flowers oftentimes taxes the florist to fill orders, especially the belated out-of-town trade. The advance Christmas orders are encouraging. From indications the cut flower supply will be scarce. Basket arrangements and fancy pottery arrangements are in the show-windows. Holly is a scarcity. Mistletoe is a drug on the market; even the grocery stores are stocked with it.

Various Notes.

Charles Street, of Clackamas, is cutting some choice roses and carnations, which find ready sales on the Portland market.

A call on Rahn & Herbert found everything in readiness for the holiday rush, with a good supply of varied stock on hand, an evidence of a well-managed establishment.

Sibson Rose Nursery reports satisfactory business in cut flowers, as well as in the nursery department. Kate Moulton is extensively grown here, with satisfactory results.

William H. Carr, of Waverley, Mass., called on the trade here this week.

Thomas C. Christensen, of Spokane, spent a few days in our midst, en route to California on a business proposition.

LILIES FOR EASTER.

Can any of the Easter lilies be forced in a night temperature of 50 degrees, and will they bloom by Easter if planted after this time? E. C.

It is now too late to plant any Easter lilies with any idea of getting them in bloom for Easter, which comes March 27 next year. If you have any bulbs not yet in the soil, better pot them and hold back for Memorial day. Lilies can be flowered successfully in a temperature of 50 degrees. You should allow two full months from the time the buds can be counted if you want them open for Easter. In a house kept about 60 degrees at night, two weeks less would suffice.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

INCORPORATED BY ACT OF CONGRESS MARCH 4, '01

Officers for 1909: President, J. A. Valentine, Denver, Colo.; vice-president, E. G. Gillett, Cincinnati, O.; secretary, Willis N. Rudd, Morgan Park, Ill.; treasurer, H. B. Beatty, Pittsburg.

Officers for 1910: President, F. R. Pierson, Tarrytown, N. Y.; vice-president, F. W. Vick, Rochester, N. Y.; secretary, H. B. Dorner, Urbana, Ill.; treasurer, H. B. Beatty, Pittsburg, Pa.

Annual convention, Rochester, N. Y., August 16 to 19, 1910.

RESULTS.
We give them. You get them.
We both have them.

THE severely cold weather has been decidedly unfavorable for the Christmas business.

ONE can ill afford to be careless in making deliveries in zero weather. A little neglect may cause the loss of many days' profits.

"WHEN the days begin to lengthen the cold begins to strengthen," according to the old adage. Well, we hope not this season. Not in many years have the shortest days of the year been so cold as in 1909.

OBITUARY.

Robert Graham.

Robert Graham, of Harrisburg, Pa., died at his home in that city December 14, after a long illness. He was born in Scotland in 1845. At the age of five years he came to this country with his parents, who located in Philadelphia. Twenty-three years later he removed to Harrisburg and engaged in the florists' business at the corner of Cameron and Maclay streets. Eight years ago his health began to fail. He had been bedfast eight weeks.

He left a widow and one daughter, Mrs. Weber, of Hollidaysburg. A brother resides on Seventh street, Harrisburg.

George W. Ostertag.

George W. Ostertag, superintendent of parks at St. Louis, died December 20, after a lingering illness. He was a brother to Henry C. and Fred Ostertag, of Ostertag Bros., and of Miss Mary Ostertag. Mr. Ostertag was at one time connected with the old firm of S. Mount & Co., wholesale florists. He leaves a wife, who is a sister to Miss Theresa Badaracco, well-known St. Louis florist, and four children. His mother also survives. The funeral took place on Wednesday, December 23, from his late residence, 1524 Deer street, to Bellefontaine cemetery. There were many beautiful floral designs sent by his many friends in the trade. The employees of the park department were his pallbearers.

Mrs. Olive Burbank.

Mrs. Olive Burbank, mother of Luther Burbank, died December 16 at the home of her son at Santa Rosa, Cal. She was 96 years of age and a native of Massachusetts.

GLADIOLI IN POOR SOIL.

When the soil is poor and sandy and barnyard manure not to be had, what commercial fertilizer is best to use to obtain good blooms and how should it be applied, below the corms when planted or by later and repeated dressings? Also, H. H. Groff asserts that he gets the best blooms from 5/8-inch to 3/4-inch bulbs. This has not been my experience. How does he do it? M. P.

In reply to the inquiry of M. P., I have had no experience with land so poor and in such a hopeless position, that, though near a town of upwards of 1,000 population, no manure could be had.

I would advise manuring for corn, and planting to gladioli the following season, with an application of hardwood ashes or potato fertilizer on the drills at, or after, planting. If, however, some humus can be obtained from a convenient location, top-dress liberally, work well in, and add fertilizer as above. The preference for the smaller planting sizes is due to the fact that they possess a higher ratio of vitality on approaching maturity than after. This means greater multiplying powers, better adaptability to change of location and, on good soil, satisfactory blooming the first season.

H. H. GROFF.

PATS ON THE BACK.

The value of a newspaper, from an advertiser's standpoint, depends largely on the way that newspaper stands with its readers. The value of the circulation is enhanced in proportion to the interest taken by the readers.

Here is renewal for another year of the best trade paper published.—George Payne, Dover, N. J., December 14, 1909.

I find the Review to be the leading up-to-date journal in its field today.—John G. Gardner, Bryn Mawr, Pa., December 13, 1909.

Enclosed is my dollar for another year of the Review. I will not do without it as long as I am in the business.—William P. Hiegert, Dallas, Tex., December 14, 1909.

I was born and reared in the florists' business and have read all kinds of papers, but the Review has them all heavily handicapped.—W. H. Fisher, Muncie, Ind., December 13, 1909.

Your letter notifying me that my subscription to the Review has expired is received. I am only too glad and anxious to have same renewed, as I think your valuable paper is as necessary for a florist as pots are to grow plants in. Wishing you success and prosperity.—A. L. Miller, Brooklyn, N. Y., December 14.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

Not only has there been the usual lull which comes before the holidays, but this year this has been accentuated by the extremely cold weather. For nearly a fortnight now the temperature has been far below normal, from 10 to 20 degrees colder than it should be. Zero weather always is a handicap to the flower business and, coming at this time, it seems to have been felt more keenly than usual. Of course there have been extremely light supplies of stock, but the demand has been so limited that the advance to Christmas prices was longer delayed than it should have been and when prices did go up it was with a jerk that added to the difficulties of both wholesalers and retailers.

Early this week supplies were considerably increased, a day or two of bright weather having helped some, but principally because the growers were afraid to hold the stock longer, it being customary for the Christmas prices to be in effect by December 20. When a grower frankly stated that his consignment early in the week was hardly shipping stock, he did not realize how he put the wholesaler up against it. There was no city trade; no demand for stock for immediate use. If the stock could not be shipped or kept, what could be and RICHMOND

These are in full crop and we can supply as fine stock as this market ever saw, in quantity, for New Year's and for weeks to come. In fact, we never have been so well fixed to fill all orders as we shall be this January—though roses usually are scarce in the first month of the year. You can count on us—splendid stock and lots of it. A large supply of the "Extra Special" grade—not high in price, quality considered.

Beauties

Our Beauties are in steady crop—fine stock, mostly medium to long. Use these for your New Year's orders. Your customers will like them.

Carnations

We have an extra heavy cut of Carnations and the quality is right up to top notch—no danger of not getting your order filled if you send it to us.

Our Carnations are widely known as always the most uniformly high grade large lot on the Chicago Market.

Violets

done with it? Everybody buying locally was looking forward to Christmas, looking for bargains in stock that would last till Sunday. Long distance shipping began Monday and was quite heavy Tuesday, but the stock that was not good enough to ship could not command much money the first of this week. The growers who expected it to realize Christmas prices will be much disappointed.

This issue of the REVIEW goes to press right in the rush of the Christmas business, too late to speak of the prospects and too early to tell anything of the outcome. It appears certain, however, that the demand will at least equal the supply of good stock. There may be white carnations, sleepy carnations and blue Beauties that do not find a satisfactory sale, but the way the orders poured in at the beginning of the week gives the impression that the wholesalers all are pretty well booked up and may be compelled to cut early orders and refuse late ones altogether. Indeed, as early as Monday some houses were rejecting good orders tendered them. The long continued dark, cold weather has reduced the supply, but a greater factor than the reduction of the local crop is that it has cut down production all over the middle west. The result is that buyers through the country, who had counted on having a pretty good supply of their own, suddenly awakened to the fact that their cut would not be anywhere near so large as they had expected. Consequently they began pouring orders in on this market, large orders, and many of them, calling for roses in thousand lots.

Early in the week the wholesalers were almost unanimous in the belief that every rose was sold. Some said they would have enough of the extra special grade so that they could take further orders, but others said they had more orders in proportion for the long stock than for the lower grades. Christmas is a season which naturally calls for the best. Stock which might do at Memorial day simply cannot be used at Christmas.

The prospect for a stiff market on roses, with a fairly large supply of carnations, has turned many buyers to the latter. Some large orders have been booked at a shade below the best prices, but for the present prices are firm. The probable supply of violets also is booked up.

The consensus of opinion in the market early this week was that the week will close with prices on the up grade, instead of on the down grade as usually is the case at a holiday. But you never can tell. Often it is the reverse of what everybody expects, and the bright sun of the last few days has brought in a lot of flowers.

Valley is again on the short side and Easter lilies hard to find. Poinsettias are abundant. Single daffodils are in. Boxwood, recently received in large quantity, has turned out to be of poor quality, so poor in some cases that no buyer will touch it. Good boxwood is scarce. As first-class holly is hard to find and high in price, boxwood and red berries are being used for Christmas wreaths in greater quantity than ever before, so good boxwood is firm in price.

Various Notes.

Considerable stock was frozen during the zero weather last week; not only cut stock on the way to the wholesalers, but Christmas plants on the way to the retailers. The growers seem to be the careless ones, for none of the stock shipped out by the wholesalers was reported lost and the retailers took good care to see that wagons were warmed and deliveries sufficiently protected.

Holly took an advance the latter part of last week, $6 being asked for anything good enough for first-class store trade, and $7 for extra good cases. Bouquet green continues scarce, but the market has quieted down. As soon as the average buyer comes to understand that green will cost $10 to $12 per case he loses interest—uses something else or goes without.

George Wienhoeber says that the Fleischman Floral Co. has ordered 75,000 violets for delivery in two days this week and that he does not think even this quantity will suffice for the Christmas demand. Hardly any of their orders for violets call for less than 100 and many are for 300 or 400 to a box.

George W. Sykes, Chicago representative of Lord & Burnham Co., says that while things are quiet just now in the greenhouse building line, he looks for 1910 to be an excellent year. He has booked some good contracts since establishing the Chicago branch. His son is in the office with him.

John Degnan has turned decorator, his specialty being the embellishment of the baby Christmas trees Winterson's Seed Store is selling in such numbers. Mr. Degnan puts these in the bird's-nest twig baskets and other appropriate receptacles and decorates them with many little bows of holly-red baby ribbon, pine cones, tiny candles, etc. So dressed up, the trees are ready sellers at fine prices.

E. Wienhoeber says the severe cold has been a great handicap on business—it has reduced supply, rendered delivery difficult and shut off Christmas shoppers. Most of Mr. Wienhoeber's customers shop in their carriages or autos, so if the cold keeps them indoors one can imagine what it does to the florists who have less wealthy patrons. At the same time, the Wienhoeber staff has been exceedingly busy with decorations, debutante affairs, etc.

in an elevated train December 18, of heart disease. Mr. Marks owned the building on Washington street occupied for some years by the A. L. Randall Co., and at one time he was a familiar figure in the wholesale section. It always was next to impossible for Mr. Marks to pass a flower store without going in to buy some of the things he saw in the window. These he sent to his friends, who were a legion. A few years ago it is probable he bought more flowers than any other person not a florist in Chicago.

Harry Rowe received a shipment from H. D. Darlington, Flushing, N. Y., December 18, some beautiful plants of heather that were frozen stiff. Zero weather has played havoc with many a plant shipment this Christmas.

Leonard Kill is planning to leave early in January, with his family, to spend the winter in southern California. The Kill family and the family of Frank Chance, of baseball fame, are neighbors and close friends. Mr. Chance has an orange grove near Los Angeles and he has secured for Mr. Kill a cottage adjoining his own.

W. E. Lynch reports that E. H. Hunt made a shipment Monday, December 20, of cut flowers to be used Christmas day at Medicine Hat, Canada, which is popularly supposed to be where the cold weather comes from. The town is in the province of Assiniboia, about 600 miles west of Winnipeg, on the Canadian Pacific. It takes four days to get there and cut flowers going into Canada have to pay twenty-five per cent duty on Chicago Christmas prices.

F. C. Hoerber, who resides at the Des Plaines establishment of Hoerber Bros., says that their well is now down 300 feet, and still in shale, with no sign of water. An 8-inch hole with a 7-inch pipe has been put down. If water is not reached within the next few days work will be abandoned until spring. The Des Plaines city water has been used thus far. It now has been definitely decided to double the glass area next spring.

C. W. McKellar has been handling his usual lot of cyclamens for Christmas and says the grower has stock to keep him selling all through January.

T. C. Yarnall joined the J. B. Deamud Co. December 20.

E. E. Pieser, of Kennicott Bros. Co., early this week said he was looking for this to be the shortest Christmas this market has known in twenty-five years.

Ned Washburn has been on the sick list for several days.

Somewhere among an accumulation of 500 cars of coal on the tracks of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad, N. C. Moore & Co. have had a number of cars of fuel, but that has not relieved their anxiety as the coal pile at the greenhouses has shrunk. The railroad would not bestir itself to find their cars for them.

Kyle & Foerster have gone into the plant business for Christmas, handling poinsettias in pans.

December 17 A. L. Randall had a narrow escape from a serious accident. The pike pole used for handling empty boxes stored in the shipping department fell as Mr. Randall was passing and the sharp point cut a gash of several inches in his cheek.

N. J. Wietor says that Wietor Bros. have a large quantity of cuttings in the sand. They are propagating heavily on Killarney, White Killarney, Jardine and Beauty. They look for a specially heavy call for White Killarney and Jardine. Bride and Maid are now in fine shape with them and decline to take a back seat for any of the new sorts.

E. C. Amling predicts a good market for roses in January; he says crops are on the down grade with most of the largest growers.

Plant A, but still has to team fuel to Plant B. It has kept them busy these zero days.

Aloys Frey was in from Crown Point December 21. He says there is plenty of work for the smaller growers these days.

L. H. Thurston, of the Central Michigan Nursery, Kalamazoo, was in town last week. The concern has a large retail cut flower business and recently was burned out, losing all its Christmas supplies. Mr. Thurston was restocking in this market. D. J. Murphy, of Manistee, was another of last week's visitors.

Among those met in the market this week were Frank A. Volz, Cincinnati; Andrew Peterson, Hoopeston, Ill.; Edward Amerpohl, Janesville, Wis.

Bowling.

In the series of games played December 16 the Violets gained one game the lead in the Florists' League. It has been determined to enter a team representing the Florists' League in the city tournament, which begins December 27 and will continue for two or three weeks. The team will consist of John Zech, Allie Zech, E. F. Winterson, George Asmus and Frank Ayers. Mr. Winterson and Allie Zech also will enter in the doubles, and they both will roll in the singles. There will be no bowling this week. The scores December 16 were:

DAYTON, OHIO.

The Market.

We have but a fair report to give on the condition of trade in the last two weeks, as there has not been much doing, either among the wholesalers or the retailers. Funeral orders were few and far between. While there was not an overabundance of stock, there was more than enough to supply the demand.

The Indian summer ended shortly after the beginning of this month, and since then dull weather has prevailed, with a light fall of snow or rain occasionally. Dayton, as yet, has not had more than a week of winter, and the mercury has not yet reached the zero mark. The dull weather, however, is telling on stock, as the cuts are much reduced. Such seems to be the case generally at holiday times, when there is a great demand. At the same time there are plenty of buds, and with a few warm, sunny days to coax them, a great difference in the supply would be noticed. Scarce as stock may be, the quality could not be better, with the following varieties to select from: Roses of all kinds, carnations, lilies, valley, narcissi, Romans, violets, poinsettias and all kinds of Christmas greens.

Niessen's News Column

The season so far shows a marked improvement over the last—partly due, no doubt, to the general increased prosperity. We feel, however, that we may claim a share of the credit for the increased business that we have experienced. Every year with us has been a step forward, and our business today is of such a volume, that we may be justly proud of our success.

THERE IS A REASON.

Had we not gained the confidence of our growers and customers, success would have been impossible. The policy we have adhered to in the past will be our motto for the future, ever watchful to improve our system and our service. This is not a New Year's resolution, but one we will have constantly in mind, every day in the year.

We thank you all for your generous support, and wish you a liberal share of the country's prosperity.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

The week ending December 22 has seen excellent business and much preparation. The severe cold has given tone to the market, while traffic has not been seriously impeded by rain or snow. Quality has improved; prices have advanced on all varieties of flowers. Carnations are showing encouraging activity, in marked contrast to the week preceding Christmas a year ago. The flowers that have reached the city during the current week have realized figures gratifyingly close to the high-water mark, to say nothing of the immense gain sure to be derived from satisfied customers.

Beauties are the strong feature of the rose market. Prices have held firmly, a good demand easily carrying off the moderate supply. The scarcity of white and the abundance of pink roses divide the prices realized by the same grades of these colors. Red is in demand. Violets are not abundant, as usual when it is so cold. Poinsettias are bringing good prices, influenced by moderate offerings. Orchids are in active request, with plenty of cattleyas and cypripediums to draw upon. The few callas coming in are eagerly sought. Trumpet Major has made its appearance. The chrysanthemum rear guard, Jones and Nonin, are generally going as substitutes for something else.

Greens are in demand, especially Asparagus plumosus, with some Farleyense and fancy ferns in choice orders. Christmas greens have had a great season; immense quantities of all kinds have been marketed. Holly was a prime favorite, loose and in wreaths.

A glance over the situation just before the rush commences may be of interest. The crops of cut flowers promise to be the largest ever harvested at Christmas in this city. The orders received from outside cities and towns are generally larger than a year ago, despite the wonderful business done in blooming plants. While it is improbable that prices will soar, except on fancy grades of certain varieties, good value for all clean, fresh flowers seems assured. Scarlet carnations will, as usual, be scarce. There will be good crops of Richmond and fair crops of Beauties. Poinsettia will not last, should the buying be heavy. The long grade of Killarney seems more in evidence than the mediums and good shorts. There will be ample material for cheap work, such as white chrysanthemums, Paper Whites, Romans, stevia and poor roses.

From Federal to Municipal.

The twenty specimen plants transferred from the federal government to Horticultural hall, Fairmount park, have been in their new quarters for several weeks. A few old-timers were removed to make room for the new-comers, but the change is scarcely noted except by the initiated. Xavia D. Schmidt, superintendent, said that the most valuable plant in the newly acquired collection is a specimen Latania Commersonii, formerly Latania rubra; it stands twenty-five feet high and weighs nearly two tons. This plant was lifted from the ground so skillfully that despite its immense size it seems probable it will thrive, losing only a couple of leaves in the transplanting. This latania is believed to be the finest specimen of its kind in the country. It is now planted at the west end of the main hall near the office of the landscape gardener.

Commenting on the progress of the work in and about Horticultural hall, Mr. Schmidt said the popular interest had been increased by the effective chrysanthemum shows given each year and by the variety and beauty of the plants and flowers in the collection, which was much more varied than of old, popular flowers that appeal to the masses being cultivated as well as rare specimens appreciated only by botanists and men of science.

Various Notes.

Most of the members of the Florists' Club attended the funeral of William K. Harris, from his late residence, 4703 Chester avenue, West Philadelphia, on the afternoon of December 16, as a last tribute of respect to their friend. Many beautiful floral offerings were seen there.

H. Bayersdorfer & Co. have a fine new wagon on the street—three in all now.

Deutsche Perle azaleas trimmed with scarlet ribbon are one of Fred Berger's telling Christmas specialties.

M. Rice says that the present season has been the busiest in the history of his house.

The Andorra Nurseries completed a large planting contract for deciduous trees in the suburbs of this city December 18. J. H. Humphreys believes that winter planted trees and shrubs, not evergreens, are apt to do even better than spring planted stock when the work is properly done. .

John Lucas & Co. say that the increased price of raw material will necessitate an advance in the price of high grade greenhouse paint.

Louis Berger has taken charge of the greenhouses of S. & H. Mergenthaler, formerly rented by the William Graham Floral Co., on East Washington Lane, Germantown.

Victor Groshens, of Glenside, Pa., has planted the iron posts for another greenhouse, 29x500 feet, connected by iron gutter with the three long houses in his present range.

B. Eschner, of M. Rice & Co., says that the rainfall in Jamaica was so extraordinarily heavy as to be almost past belief. The rain and storms somewhat marred Mr. Eschner's trip.

Robert Craig says that this is the banner Christmas for flowering plants; all records have been surpassed.

Myers & Samtman, Wyndmoor, Pa., will cut something like 15,000 Beauties in the fortnight preceding Christmas. Their houses of My Maryland are attracting much attention, the plants being in heavy crop.

John Savage, Gwynedd, Pa., has been cutting well from his exclusive specialty, pink snapdragon.

Paul Berkowitz, of H. Bayersdorfer & Co., reports a phenomenal business season, the largest in the history of his house. A new steamer is in this week with heavy shipments of holiday goods. Many of them will go out the moment they arrive. PHIL.

GRAND RAPIDS.

The weather is cold and sleighing is good, making it an ideal, old-time Christmas. The snowy, cloudy weather we are still having is telling on the quantity of flowers cut. Ten days ago it looked as though there would even be plenty of carnations for Christmas, but now a scarcity is assured, and when it comes to red there will not be nearly enough for local wants, to say nothing of what will be required to fill shipping orders. Roses are apparently in fair supply, unless it be red and Beauties, which are always scarce.

For the first time in several years poinsettias will be scarce, while azaleas will be plentiful. There will be plenty of fine cyclamens. Bulb stock, such as valley, Paper Whites, Romans, etc., are shown in abundance. As for holly and greens, they are in evidence everywhere and continue as popular as ever.

Eli Cross has rented an adjoining store and uses it for the sale of palms, ferns and potted plants.

Henry Smith has the largest quantity of azaleas, while the Grand Rapids Floral Co. and Crabb & Hunter are the only ones who got their poinsettias in on time.

Madge Dolan, of the Pantling, had a nice banquet December 18, given by the commercial travelers stopping at that popular hostelry, at which the decorations were all red roses and red carnations.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Christmas week opened clear and cold, with the prospect of moderating as the great holiday of the year approaches, making plant deliveries safe. Even as early as Monday, December 20, supplies were decreasing and higher prices were quoted, with a light demand. The plant industry, however, was booming and everyone who grows first-class stock of any kind in flowering plants is now on velvet, for there is little left unclaimed. What the local trade has not absorbed has gone on its mission of Christmas cheer to every part of the country. The present outlook is favorable for the greatest Christmas ever known in New York.

Beauties sold at 60 cents Saturday, December 18, with the tendency upward; 75 cents to $1 is a safe prediction for the best for Christmas. Other roses hold firm, but no abnormal prices are possible. Carnations are firm and as high as 10 cents is asked for the best. This will likely be top for the week, as the supply will grow in volume as the week advances. The old evil of holding back the regular daily shipments is already evident, and the usual flood at the last seems inevitable. There will be few chrysanthemums and these are already sold. The orchid supply is large and varied and prices will hold easily until after the holidays. Lilies, valley and all bulbous stock are bringing top prices.

Apart from the shortage in bouquet green, the green goods men are jubilant. Day and night the making of wreaths and roping goes on, with large forces of extra men. Holly, when good, sells rapidly at $4 to $5 a case. The price of bouquet green is 12 cents at present and 15 cents may be obtained before the week is over. There are millions of Christmas trees. Every grocer and butcher has a hand in their distribution. Florists now handle only the selected stock. The small, bushy evergreens in pots and baskets sell fast.

Various Notes.

M. C. Ebel, treasurer of the Aphine Co., of Madison, has been greatly encouraged by the results of the demonstration made last week in New York and to be repeated shortly in Boston.

The next meeting of the Florists' Club will take place January 10. It will be inauguration night and the new officers will orate and the plans of the new president will be elaborated.

The debutante receptions have been numerous this month and some large weddings and banquets have given the retail florists general encouragement. The openings of new plays at the theaters, averaging one a night of late, have also added to the responsibilities of the big stores in the theater zone.

Hunt's poinsettias from Staten Island are handled by J. K. Allen.

The greenhouse builders are all cheerful as to the prospect for business in 1910.

The banquet and ball season is close at hand. The Greek ball January 17 will be a gorgeous affair if it is at all like its predecessors.

Frank Good, with John King Duer, of Madison avenue, goes to Buffalo January 1 to join the force of S. A. Anderson.

The fourteenth annual smoker of the Madison Florists' Club will be held Wednesday, January 12. This is always a warm evening in New Jersey.

Last week, down on lower Fifth avenue, Wernz & Koehne took charge of the Grace church and house decorations for the Whitridge-Greenough wedding, and December 29 have the Gourd-Milhan wedding, an elaborate one, at St. Patrick's cathedral.

Kessler Bros., were practically sold out of plants December 18.

W. Elliott & Sons are making extensive improvements in their store and already planning for the spring auction trade.

The Cleary Horticultural Co. has a large stock of trees, plants, evergreens and holly for Christmas.

The Stumpp & Walter Co. maintains a unique decoration, both inside and out, at the big store on Barclay street, with Christmas bells, holly trees and Japanese novelties.

O. V. Zangen, Hoboken, is well pleased with his wholesale cut flower branch on West Twenty-eighth street and its progress during the last year.

Russin & Hanfling say they have had their most successful year.

Walter Sheridan is celebrating his twenty-seventh Christmas in the wholesale cut flower business.

G. E. Bradshaw is receiving large shipments of asparagus from the south.

The Cut Flower Exchange manager and his assistants have arranged for the yearly turkey raffle December 23. Two fine birds will reward the lucky speculators.

Gunther Bros. have had a successful year in their new store and are handling violets as extensively as in the old days of the nineties on West Twenty-ninth street.

John P. Scherer, of Scherer & Co., was out of the city for two months this fall, with a force of men, collecting ferns, hemlock, laurel and evergreens for his new store at 106 West Twenty-sixth street.

The Manhattan Flower Market is sending out its usual novelties in calendars.

Siebrecht & Son are cutting large quantities of Cattleya labiata.

The New York Florists' Club's turkey contest, December 15, was a success and the Astorias carried off all three birds, much to the delight of the generous New Yorkers, who would not roll up to their records against their genial guests. John Miesem won the high score turkey with 199; John Donaldson, the high average in two games, 182; and Robert Berry by one pin from Jacobson, Einsman and Shaw, the ninety-nine score contest. The scores of two of the games were as follows:

The Market.

All we can say for the business of last week is that it was fair. It was about as it usually is at this time of the year, just before the holidays. Of course we are all looking for this week to be exceedingly busy. The weather has been clear and cold and no doubt there will be plenty of cut stock for the Christmas demand. Blooming plants will have a big call and a great deal of the stock of the west end florists days ago was marked sold.

The market was weak Monday morning, December 20, and it was beginning to look as though the shippers were holding their stock back in order to have big consignments for Thursday and Friday. Every year the growers send in a lot of pickled stock, which brings little or nothing.

Most of the stock is of extra good quality just now, in roses and carnations. Clear weather will bring in lots of violets. Of bulb stock, such as Romans, Paper Whites, valley and lilies, there will be plenty. There will be a fair supply of poinsettias also. Extra good smilax and other greens are seen in quantity.

Various Notes.

E. W. Guy, of Belleville, spent December 17 in the city buying supplies. Mr. Guy celebrated his birthday at his home that night, but would not tell us how young he is.

W. E. Jordan, assistant city forester, says the department has a big force of men looking after the street trees in all parts of the city. Julius Koenig and Charles Fulgraf are members of the staff of inspectors.

F. A. Ryan Floral Co. has opened at the old stand of the Schlueter Floral Co., at 1417 St. Louis avenue.

Edward Schultz, who for many years was a park keeper, died last week at the age of 84 years. He was well known to many in the trade.

Ralph Bush, son of Isidore Bush, who ran a grape farm at Bushberg, Mo., for many years, died last week. Mr. Bush was well known to many nurserymen throughout the country.

Mrs. Ellison, of the Ellison Floral Co., reports that the firm has been exceedingly busy of late, with weddings, dinners and receptions. They are preparing a novel dinner table, with a large tulip of flowers in the center, which opens, revealing a small Christmas table in the center of the tulip.

Kalisch Bros. are making their usual fine Christmas window display. The boys say they are having a fine run of business.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.

Two years ago Thos. Devoy's Son found a sport from Marie Louise violet, which has been carefully watched and of which there now is sufficient stock to plant a whole house. It has the characteristics of the old variety when grown at its best. The bloom is pure lilac, resembling the wistaria in color; highly fragrant. The supply of blooms for this season has been secured by Chas. Thorley, New York. It is named Marie Elise, after the pretty little daughter of the raiser. Freesia Purity is planted around each bench here; takes up no room and brings a good price.

Saltford's Flower Shop is making a fine display for Christmas and by the time this is in type will be through the best holiday business yet experienced. They have given up growing violets, although the veteran, W. G. Saltford, pointed to a spot where he made $10,000 on Marie Louise in one season. That was going some. Now his hobby is orchids, which he gives personal attention. He showed me a fine plant of Cattleya Trianæ alba with ten blooms. He has a seedling carnation on the order of but much superior to Mrs. Patten, in that the markings are stronger; a delicate blush shade suffuses the entire bloom. It will be exhibited at Pittsburg and will attract attention as a commercial fancy variety. Chrysanthemums are gone, with the exception of John Burton, an excellent incurved pink in fine shape for Christmas. A few were grown for trial and a house will be planted for late use next year. I noted a big batch of Lilium giganteum just potted, on benches. Mr. Saltford is confident, by maintaining a temperature of 60 degrees, he will have all in bloom for Easter; has done it in three months before. This is of value to many who never forced this lily for so early a date as Easter, 1910.

A. Laub & Son have a batch of Jeanne Nonin sold for Christmas at a good figure.

Conrad C. Gindra has some fine specimen ponderosa lemons, not, as he says, for the purpose of handing out to his friends, particularly at this festive season, but he believes that something out of the ordinary attracts attention and incidentally helps business.

Murphy & Schaumburg found the boiler that heats the town greenhouse out of gear just when needed. It took some hustling to get in shape before the busy time. M.

HERRIN, ILL.—W. M. Ridgway has nearly completed two new vegetable houses, 34x130. Ed Laramee has two new vegetable houses, 14x25.

TROUBLE WITH SOIL.

I have a solid bed in my house and it will not do well for me, so I used a small strip of litmus paper, which I send herewith. Can you tell me what to put on and how much? The bed is 6x25 feet. O. S. H.

The test paper shows little trace of acid in the soil, so that is not the cause of failure. Had this querist been more explicit and described conditions and previous treatment of the bed I would have been in better position to advise. Try a sprinkling of wood ashes, say a 6-inch potful, and stir the surface to the depth of one inch. Ribes.

TO ENJOY A MELON.

Probably many readers of the Review will enjoy, if not the melon itself, at least the following recipe freely translated from La Tribune des Sociétés Horticoles, Brussels: "Take a Cavaillon melon (shun the cantaloupe), cut it circularly round the stalk with an enameled knife and remove the seed with a silver spoon, not disturbing the pulp. This done, put alternate layers of refined sugar (two spoonfuls) and alpine strawberries until it is full, and then pour in a bottle of irreproachable Bordeaux to fill up the spaces between berries and sugar. Then replace the severed part to serve as a stopper, and let it stand in a cool cellar for twenty-four hours. Empty then the contents into a dish, and the solemn hour will have arrived. As for the melon itself, present it to some lukewarm friend at the right season."

Racine, Wis.—John Bourgaise, 2006 North Chatham street, proprietor of the North Side Greenhouse, met with a bad accident December 16. With other men, Mr. Bourgaise was engaged unloading a large barrel filled with flower pots, when it commenced to roll. In an effort to save it Mr. Bourgaise got in the way and the barrel rolled on his left foot and ankle, breaking both bones of the leg above the ankle, and he was otherwise bruised.

NEW ORLEANS.

The Market.

Christmas is not of the same importance in New Orleans to florists as it is to those in the north, but still the demand for flowers, trees and general decorations is on the increase every year and we can expect a lively demand this week. Our chrysanthemums are coming to an end, but we can still cut some fine roses which have not been touched by the cold. Our home-grown narcissi will soon appear. They are not as white as the imported Paper Whites, but they come in handy for ordinary business.

Club Meeting.

Thursday, December 16, our local society had its monthly meeting. The display of plants was creditable. James A. Newsham, who had lately quite a number of different varieties of orchids coming into flower, had some extra good sprays of Cattleya Trianæ alba. The Metairie Ridge Nurseries had some well grown Gloire de Lorraine begonias. U. J. Virgin showed some azaleas and lily of the valley. Abele Bros. had a variety of begonia.

It was announced that E. Baker has been nominated superintendent of the city parking commission. It is the best move that could have been made. The commission was so far composed of men all full of good intentions, but not being thoroughly competent on the subject they could not do better than by taking such a man as Mr. Baker as co-worker. With his long experience as manager of public parks, they surely made a good selection.

Secretary C. R. Panter said that the chartering of the society was in the hands of the lawyer, J. C. Valdo. M. M. L.

As members of the trade are well aware, the business of growing flowers has developed rapidly here in recent years, and large quantities of stock are daily shipped to the Boston and Lowell markets.

One of the most familiar names in the trade is that of M. A. Patten & Co., whose range is situated near the railroad and is consequently a familiar sight to those who pass through the town on the Boston trains. This firm makes a specialty of carnations, but also grows lilies and geraniums, and exhibits at many of the flower shows, especially that of the Massachusetts Agricultural Society. Mr. Patten has recently added a 20,000-gallon tower tank to his plant.

John T. Gale's greenhouses are situated in Helvetia street, and he has recently nearly doubled the capacity of one of his

THE covers of the seed catalogues thus far to hand indicate that the lithographers have had a busy season. The covers never were gayer.

CHARLES M. JACKSON, son of the well-known English clematis specialist, who has been with Burpee & Co., at Doylestown, Pa., has removed to St. Louis, where he will have charge of the garden seed department of the Plant Seed Co.

HENRY FISH, of Carpenteria, Cal., says crops of limas were good last season, quality above the average, but that there was a sad shortage in snap beans. It will not be any easier to supply them in 1910, he says. Rains have been timely and sufficient so far.

to 3 marks higher next season for the best grades. This is from advice just received from Germany.

SEEDSMEN interested in the market gardeners' trade should take a look at page 51.

SEEDSMEN will be interested in the closing paragraphs of the "Notes From England," on another page of this issue.

THE politicians once more insist our esteemed friend, Mr. Wilson, is about to resign as Secretary of Agriculture.

W. ATLEE BURPEE says he has been behind hand with his catalogue work this season, but the book is ready for mailing on the usual days.

A. C. ZVOLANEK, Bound Brook, N. J., is on his annual trip to the sweet pea seed growing districts in California, somewhat earlier than usual.

SPECULATION continues to make the clover seed price. It will until after the holidays. Then the spring demand should be felt. Most large speculative dealers are bullish.

A note and illustration on the tomato trials of the Livingston Seed Co., intended for this department, appears on page 15 of this issue because of lack of room on this page.

MORE than 250,000 pounds of sunflower seed were raised in the vicinity of Bethlehem, Ky., during the past season, all of which has been marketed. One buyer handled 162,000 pounds. It is said that those who raise the seed do not know what it is used for.

THE Rhudy & Hall Seed Co., of Kansas City, Kan., has bought for $1,200 the stock of the William A. Duncan Seed Co., of St. Joseph, which filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy November 30. The sale was made through J. J. Garth, temporary receiver for the bankrupt concern.

AN authority in the lima bean market says that the California crop consists of about a million bags, but points out that this seemingly large quantity, eighty million pounds, is in reality less than a pound apiece for the people of the United States. It is said that Pennsylvania mining towns consume a fifth of the crop.

THE Smithfield Club cattle show, held in London, England, the first week in December every year, is noted, among several other things, for the great assemblage of seed merchants who come up from the country to buy their supply of seeds for the season's trade, and many transactions always take place at this show. We understand that one wholesale house has paid at this show as much as 100 shillings per hundredweight (21.78 cents per pound), for Golden Tankard mangel, and he has to make some profit on this. It is understood that the retail price for this article will be from 40 to 48 cents per pound. A considerable

Many florists plant these in boxes, or among their carnations, in the winter. They are excellent for decorative purposes and realize good prices, either wholesale or retail. Gladiolus are a good catch crop and take up but little room. The following are the best for this purpose.

Gladiolus Gandavensis Hybrids

America. The flowers, which are of immense size, are of the most beautiful flesh-pink color. $3.85 per 100; $30.00 per 1000.

quantity of Gradus and other fancy peas changed hands at $7.50 per bushel, and the opinion was general that these peas next year must again be dear.

The Ewing Seed Co. has been incorporated at Nashville, Tenn., with a capital stock of $15,000. The incorporators are W. B. Ewing, J. I. Newsom, Jr., B. F. Wilkerson and William B. Shelton.

Sluis Seed Store, Chicago, reports the arrival this week of its first shipment of the season's European seeds. Their sources of supply have advised them that the late shipments this year are due to the bad weather which prevailed during harvest time.

The 1910 general catalogue of the Barteldes Steel Co., Lawrence, Kan., reached the Review December 18. It is an exception to the general run of seed catalogues in that it features a forage plant, alfalfa, instead of a garden vegetable, on its lithographed front cover. This is the forty-third annual edition of the Barteldes book.

The local paper at San Jose, Cal., gives a column write-up, with portrait, to L. Ki Soon, the Chinese foreman of the Sweeney farm of the Braslan Seed Growers' Co., at Fair Oaks, which includes 825 acres. It is stated that L. Ki Soon is 29 years of age, that he started with the Braslan interests twelve years ago and now receives a salary of $2,500 a year.

The general catalogue of W. W. Rawson & Co., Boston, reached the Review December 17. It is a book of 160 pages, 7x9¾, and is especially notable for its compactness. It does not look crowded, but there is no waste space. The cover is embossed, on rough stock, and both front and back there is a panel in which is pasted a picture in colors. The book is a McFarland product.

Right in the busy season, or before March 1, those seedsmen who do business in corporate organization will have to take time to figure up their net income in 1909 for the purposes of Taft's corporation tax. To comply fully with the law an inventory December 31 is necessary, which is to be compared with the inventory one year previous, but how many seedsmen took an inventory as of December 31, 1908?

In a circular sent to watermelon growers, W. M. Girardeau & Son, Monticello, Fla., for whom R. L. Eaton now is manager, say: "We select our seeds from the largest and most perfect melons. We cut off both ends of these melons and take our select seeds from the middles only. These seeds we think are the best. Of course seeds saved in this way

EXPOSITION GRADE. This is an extra fancy grade of Berlin crowns. There are never enough of them to supply the demand. Out of Mr. Reimschneider's entire growing, he usually has only 50,000 to 75 000 of this grade, which is evidence of the care with which they are selected. In cases of 2000 crowns, at $32.00 per case; $17.00 per 1000.

PERFECTION GRADE. This is a true Berlin, extra selected, 3-year-old straight, long, clean crown with long fibrous roots. Under proper treatment, they force out with tall racemes, bearing the maximum number of large bells, free from decay at the bottom. The foliage is ample but not too abundant. In cases of 1000 pips, at $14.00 per case.

HOLSATIA GRADE. These are suitable for later forcing, or for cold storage purposes, and are highly recommended to seedsmen. Very fine selected 3-year-old Hamburg Pips, very heavy roots, extra strong growth. Will hold over well in cold storage and produce good flowers the following fall. In cases of 2500 pips, at $30.00 per case; per 1000, $13.50.

HYDRANGEA OTAKSA. Pot-grown, fine plants, in 6-in. pots, $15.00 per 100.

cost entirely too much to be sold by our seedsmen generally, who have to contend with sharp competition; they could not afford to even pay the cost of harvesting these select seeds and offer them in competition with seed grown in Kansas or Iowa at one-third the cost.''

FREDERICK W. EBERLE has purchased from Frank A. Sherman the interest of the latter in the seed firm of Sherman & Eberle, doing business at Albany, N. Y. This business started in 1898 under the firm name of Woodward, Sherman & Eberle, and upon the withdrawal of Mr. Woodward in 1902 was continued by the other partners under the name of Sherman & Eberle. The business has grown and has demonstrated that Albany is a good center for mail order as well as counter business.

IMPORTS.

The imports of seeds through the port of New York for the week ending December 11 were as follows:

OPPOSE FREE SEEDS.

Representative Ralph W. Moss is the only farmer on the Indiana Congressional delegation. He has unexpectedly declared war on the custom of distributing garden and flower seeds free to the rural districts. He characterizes the time-honored custom as a useless, extravagant vote-getting practice.

Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture. This is considered as one of the dead committees, but Mr. Moss expects to inject some life into it. He will insist, when the committee meets, that one of the best ways to lop off the expenses will be to stop the free seed distribution. He will follow this up by introducing a bill and speaking on it in the House when the opportunity offers.

ONE HUNDRED YEARS AGO.

The wholesale prices of garden seeds 100 years ago were, at the lowest, 300 per cent higher than prices for the same seeds at present; really, in many cases, 500 or 600 per cent higher than at present and, in the case of spinach, 1,000 per cent higher. In proof of all this, I have before me a copy of a bill against Samuel Clarkeson Co., Natchez, Miss., April, 1819, in which bill the wholesale prices are as they appear in the first column. The second column shows the percentage of cost over the present usual wholesale prices.

		Per Cent.
Beans, Brown Valentine, per bu.	$ 8.00	250
Cabbage, Early York, per lb.	3.00	300
Squash, Long Green, per lb.	1.00	300

Turnip, Early Dutch, per lb.	1.50	700
Spinach, Round Seeder, per lb.	1.00	1,000

And the charge for strapping box and porterage was $2.

But even under these excessive prices, there was no greater profit than there is now, as the cost of seeds was 300 to 400 per cent greater than now, as for example: Beet, lettuce, cantaloupe, cucumber, and onion seed brought the seedfarmer $1 per pound, while peas and beans brought the grower $6 or $7 per bushel; consequently, in spite of the prices obtained 100 years ago, the percentage of profit did not bring the merchant any greater gain than do the present prices; whereas, now the greater field for business and the greater ability of people to buy is as twenty to one, therefore, no one wishes to return to the conditions of olden times.

Burnet Landreth.

THE SITUATION IN HOLLAND.

The Holland bulb and seed growers have contended with unfavorable weather conditions ever since the spring of this year, and conditions have not yet changed in their favor. At the end of November much anxiety resulted among the bulb growers because of the sharp frost and the prospect for an early advent of winter. The season for planting having been retarded by bad weather, it meant that many thousands of the stock bulbs would be left unplanted should the ground freeze, and extra pressure has been put on to get the planting finished. The seed growers have been having unusual difficulty in getting their crops in shape for delivery. The wet autumn retarded harvest and caused much loss, and the cold and wet have interfered with the work in the warehouses, where artificial heat has been required.

November was an extremely good month for the cleaning up of surplus lots of bulbs. Gladioli have been in especially good demand and there is now little in the way of surplus stock left on hand. Spiræas have been steadily advancing in price and the market is practically bare of good stock.

WE find the REVIEW a necessity in our business; we could not well do without it.—H. J. WEBER & SONS NURSERY CO., Nursery, Mo.

I SHOULD rather miss my meals than miss the REVIEW, the brightest and best trade paper I ever had. No florist, however small, should be without it.—GEORGE TAYLOR, Lethbridge, Can.

NOT a few subscribers save themselves the bother of annual renewal by sending the REVIEW $2, $3, or sometimes $5, instead of the dollar-bill that insures fifty-two visits of the paper.

THE ad we had in your paper the last two months certainly kept us what they call "humping," for orders came in every day and they are coming yet. I am certainly more than satisfied.—WILLIAM EHMANN, Corfu, N. Y.

PACIFIC COAST.

Sacramento, Cal.—J. W. Evans, of this city, has opened a branch store in the Ellis block, Marysville, Cal., and appearances seem to indicate that he will have a flourishing trade at the new place. While all the stock will at first be shipped from this city, it is said that greenhouses will be erected near Marysville as soon as Mr. Evans can secure a suitable tract of ground.

SEATTLE.

The Market.

With a prosperous Thanksgiving to look back upon, the craft have high expectations of a profitable Christmas rush and are preparing accordingly. Good stock, also, is more plentiful and no trouble is expected from this source, as in other years. Every season has added one or two new growers, causing an increase in the output of stock. This, together with our improved connections with California, makes our opportunities far better.

Potted plants, such as azaleas, poinsettias and the bulbous stock, are none too plentiful. However, the supply is equal to the demand. Chrysanthemums are gaining rapidly in quality and there is a plentiful supply of such sorts as Bonnaffon and Timothy Eaton, as well as the numerous smaller varieties. Thus, with the elegant violets and orchids to please the eye, there is plenty of choice. Moreover, these have been backed during the last week with quite a number of Easter lilies and valley, besides narcissi and poinsettias. Everybody has a large stock to display.

Christmas greens, of which many varieties are to be had in this locality, made their appearance early last week. In fact, everything has taken on a Christmas air. English holly, which is selling steadily at $1 to $1.50 per pound, must be spoken of specially, for it certainly is fine stock and a ready seller.

During the last ten days, funeral work and a few small decorations, along with a good transient trade, have moved the surplus stock well. As a general rule, only the best of everything is shown in the stores.

Various Notes.

Mr. Lamley has returned from an extended eastern trip. Wm. Billingsley, also of the McCoy firm, expects to have his twenty acres of Yakima land in fruit by spring.

Rosaia Bros. sprung a surprise by holding a chrysanthemum show last week, with large crowds attending.

W. G. Hopkins, formerly connected with the Seattle Carnation Co., has begun building a modern King Construction Co. house, 50x300 feet, with the intention of adding more houses later. This will probably be among the most modern houses on the coast.

Graff's Flower Shop has created a sensation with several attractive novelties for Christmas business. Mr. Graff was among the Seattle fans on their recent trip to the bowling matches at Tacoma.

Albert Crause, of Sandahl & Son, reports a brisk trade during the fall in both nursery stock and flowers.

Mr. Johnson, of the Fremont Floral Co., has had great success since opening his new place and has fine prospects of future business. Thos. B. Pritchard, manager of Graff's Flower Shop, had an interesting article on "Florists' Salesmanship" in a recent issue of the Salesman's Magazine. J. G. C.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

We had a splendid change in the weather last week, bright, sunshiny days and cool nights, with a touch of frost in the mornings, being the ideal we are now experiencing. The present weather, however, was preceded by several days during which we had a few degrees of frost, and some cold north winds. The general effect, up to the present time, has been to make outside flowers rather scarce; in fact, everything, with the exception of violets, Paper White narcissi and chrysanthemums, has disappeared from the field. Of the latter flower there are still fair quantities being brought into town, of good quality. The Chinese growers have raised the prices fully 100 per cent in the last ten days, and even under the most favorable conditions the prices may be expected to go higher before Christmas.

Violets, although in rather short supply, have not been raised in price by the growers. Owing to the excess of moisture earlier in the month, the length of stem and size and texture of flower have been all that could be desired. With carnations, the indications are that, if we are treated to fair weather between now and the holidays, we will have an abundant supply. At the present writing Enchantress, Winsor, White Enchantress, Harlowarden, Estelle, and other first-class varieties, cost the stores at the rate of $4 per hundred, while smaller flowered sorts and shorter stemmed stock sell at about $2.50 per hundred.

In the line of roses, Beauties still continue to be in short supply. Fancy stock of this variety is exceptionally scarce, while with Brides and Maids there is a much better showing, and plenty of first quality blooms can be had at the rate of $8 per hundred. There is a heavy demand for red roses, and only a few Liberties are being brought into town.

California red berries, which usually at this time of the year are eagerly bought up by the jobbers and green goods men, have been sent into town in such enormous quantities that the market, at the present time, is practically flooded. First quality stock sold for $65 per ton prior to Thanksgiving, but subsequent enormous shipments flooded the market and the price rapidly declined until it has been possible to obtain all the berries wanted at the rate of $40 per ton landed at the stores. Should we have any excessively cold weather, as we had on two former years, within the next few days, there is a possibility that berries may yet advance rapidly in price.

Potted poinsettias have made their appearance in the shop windows. Good stock in 6-inch and 7-inch pots is being held at from 75 cents to $1 each and from that price down to 50 cents for short stock in pots and pans. It is evident that there will be quite a shortage of cut poinsettias. Practically no stock is being shipped from the south and the local dealers have devoted their attention almost exclusively to pot grown stock.

Regarding other kinds of flowering plants in pots, there will be fair lots of Begonia Lorraine, cyclamen and primulas. Azaleas, owing to the fact that so much blind stock has been shipped to the coast this year, will be scarce. Many growers have been greatly disappointed in the quality of the European azaleas, and where large preparations have been made to have a large quantity of well-flowered plants at Christmas, merely green heads have been the result. The various varieties of nephrolepis are good sellers, and seem to be in better demand than anything else in the fern line. From present indications we should have a heavy holiday trade, and everyone is well stocked for the event.

Various Notes.

L. O. Beery has returned from a several months' trip to Holland and Belgium. He made large purchases of European nursery stock while abroad.

One of the large greenhouses recently constructed by Domoto Bros., of Elmhurst, Cal., was blown down by a storm which raged in that section on December 13. This house was 30x400 feet and had recently been used for the growing of chrysanthemums.

Bennett & Smith, of Fruitvale, Cal., are in line with a splendid stock of poinsettias and ferns for the holidays.

The Thorsted Floral Co., of Market street, have been offered a bonus of $3,000 for the lease they have of their store in the Phelan building.

H. Plath reports the heaviest trade he has ever experienced in the line of small seedling ferns for baskets and pans for the holidays.

R. B. Hunter, recently manager of the Germain Seed & Plant Co., of Los Angeles, is in town.

S. W. Marshall, the well known dealer of Fresno, Cal., is in town for a few days' visit. G.

The Market.

General business is none too good at present, there being the usual lull before Christmas. Everybody is preparing for a big holiday trade.

Carnations are scarce and prices are soaring. Paper Whites are arriving in great abundance. A few Romans are seen. Chrysanthemums are entirely out of the market. Violets are everywhere, and they are certainly fine. They bring from 5 cents a bunch on the street stands to 15 cents in the stores.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.
Officers for 1909-10: Pres., F. H. Stannard, Ottawa, Kan.; Vice-Pres., W. P. Stark, Louisiana, Mo.; Sec'y, John Hall, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. Thirty-fifth annual meeting, Denver, June, 1910.

APPLE orcharding as a commercial proposition is receiving greatly increased attention in New England and New York state. Baldwin is the variety most frequently planted.

THE M. J. Wragg Nursery Co., of Des Moines, Ia., has purchased forty acres of land four and a half miles north of that city, for $12,000. It is said that the land will be used principally for the growing of fruit.

JOHN T. WITHERS, the "tree doctor," has formed a corporation at Jersey City, N. J., with a capital of $25,000, for the purpose of carrying on business as landscape architects, gardeners, etc. His associates in the enterprise are E. Withers and J. F. Marion.

ARTICLES of association have been filed in the office of the county clerk of Alcona county, Michigan, by two allied corporations, for the purpose of conducting a nursery and other business in that county. One of the allied concerns is the Evergreen Tree Co., incorporated by William Eaton, Albert Shain, E. J. Kendall and J. S. Ferguson, with a capital of $80,000. The other is the Michigan Land & Title Co., incorporated by Albert Shain, J. C. Merrell and G. S. Ferguson, with a capital of $150,000.

PROPAGATING PRIVET.

Can California privet be propagated in California by making cuttings of hard wood about two or three inches long next January or February and planting them about two inches apart each way in soil in flats? A. N.

This privet may be propagated either by soft-wood cuttings in summer in a frame or greenhouse, or by hard-wood cuttings. The usual plan adopted when hard-wood cuttings are used is to cut them off in late fall. Strip off all leaves, tie in bundles and bury over winter, planting them out in nursery rows as soon as the soil can be worked in early spring.

You should have no trouble in rooting them in flats, as spoken of, in sandy loam in a cool house, or a coldframe would answer fully as well in your latitude. We would suggest making the cuttings about six inches long, however. One advantage of planting them out directly into nursery rows is that there is less labor attached to this method of propagation, and the cuttings, if set four to five inches apart, can be left to grow into salable plants. Leave the rows two and one-half to three feet apart, to allow of horse cultivation. C.

TO DISCOURAGE GREEN FLY.

In the department of Vegetable Forcing in the REVIEW of December 16 there were replies to two inquiries about getting rid of green fly on lettuce. My way of accomplishing this is to take fresh tobacco stems from a local cigar factory, dry them well, run them through a cutting machine and scatter them underneath the young lettuce plants. This is done right after transplanting and the stems are renewed when the crop is half grown. When one follows up this practice he is not troubled with green fly, but if the precaution is neglected, before one knows it his crop is "lousy." If once allowed to get a start the tobacco stems will not kill them off; they are a preventive, not a cure. It must be followed up continually, whether you see any bugs or not.

I have been growing lettuce for twelve or fifteen years and this is the best precaution I know of. I never fumigate my lettuce houses, or spray with any kind of nicotine, and am not much troubled with green fly. Be careful not to cover the young plants, but cover the soil under them. H. L. CLAPP.

GRAPES WITH INSIDE BORDER.

We are building a grapery and peach house, 25x66, with curvilinear eaves—no gutters or plates. One-half of this house will be used as a late grapery, with vines on both sides of the house. The builder has planned for an inside border only, claiming this to be an advantage over a border on the outside. The foundation walls of solid masonry will extend four feet below the floor level. The border will be three feet deep and extend the full width of the house. We desire to retard the vines as late in the spring as possible. Can this be successfully done with an inside border? E. K.

The idea that outside as well as inside borders are necessary for late grapes, is now pretty well exploded. About all the best growers of grapes, as well as peaches and nectarines, prefer to have their borders entirely inside, where they are under more perfect control. A depth of two and one-half feet is ample for grapes and you need not make up all the border at once; it is better if added to piecemeal. If your borders were entirely outdoors, your vines would not be any later than if the roots were under glass. I would certainly advise against any outdoor borders. With roots all under glass, you know where you have them and can be tolerably sure that they get the proper amount of moisture, which is less easy when they are outdoors. W. N. C.

LETTUCE AT GRAND RAPIDS.

The Grand Rapids Greenhouse Co. has two and a half acres of lettuce to cut for the holiday trade, but the officers do not feel as happy over the situation as they would if prices were higher. The selling price from the producer is now 5 to 6 cents a pound, but there is hope that better figures may be in effect later. Recently the company shipped a carload of the lettuce to Cincinnati, but while there was a fair demand for the stock neither dealers nor public appeared willing to pay the high prices which have obtained in other years at this season. The lettuce now awaiting cutting will run to fully 1,000 barrels and each barrel with a standard weight of eighty pounds. The thousand barrels would make about seven carloads.

ANTS ON LETTUCE.

Will you kindly inform us what harm little red ants do to lettuce in hothouses and what can be done to get rid of them? H. B.

I know of no injury ever done to lettuce by ants, but it is often the case that ants are found crawling upon plants that are infested with aphis, commonly called green lice, and I suspect that your lettuce has aphis on it. The aphis secrete a sticky, sweet substance, sometimes called honey dew, upon the foliage where they are particularly thick. The ants are fond of this substance.

If your lettuce has aphis on it, of course you will not ruin your trade and hurt all other growers in the business by putting the lettuce on the market in that condition. A batch of lettuce infested with lice will turn the average housewife against it so that she will not buy any more that winter. Get rid of the lice, if there are any, by regular fumigations with tobacco stems or nicotine fumigating papers. H. G.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

There was but little to complain about as far as business was concerned last week. Stock seemed to shorten up until trade needed all that came in, and consequently prices stiffened somewhat in the latter part of the week. The demand seemed to call for everything except Beauties, which did not seem to be needed badly at an increased price.

Today finds the weather clear and cold, with the thermometer varying from 8 degrees at night to 20 degrees during the day, which is not especially delightful for the people handling plants.

The outlook for a Christmas cut is reported good on everything except roses, which will be short in this vicinity. Everyone reports good prospects, also, of a satisfactory Christmas business, if prices do not soar too high, as they say there is a limit. One thing is sure—the stores are all provided with quantities of plants, the effects in baskets and pans are beautiful, and these will take the place of flowers in many cases if prices on flowers are too unreasonable.

There seems to be a plentiful supply of Christmas greens of all kinds, but it is still a few days until Christmas and one cannot tell what may happen in that time.

Various Notes.

Ed. McCallum, of the McCallum Co., has been a grip victim, but hopes to be out for the Christmas rush.

Walter Breitenstein was also confined to his home several days last week.

Allen Langhans, of the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co., was another victim.

Alexander Nelson, superintendent of Arsenal park, who died a week or two ago, came to his death by an accident. Returning home, he started round to the rear of his house, tripped and fell, the injury causing his death. He left a wife and nine children, most of them quite young.

Among the visitors were: Mr. and Mrs. Edward Leizmann, Latrobe, Pa.; Mrs. J. J. Beck and daughter, New Castle, Pa.; Miss Agnes L. Wells, Steubenville, O.; George L. Huscroft, Steubenville, O.; John Walker, Youngstown, O.; E. J. Fancourt, Philadelphia, Pa., and Earl Lutes, Monessen, Pa. Hoo-Hoo.

ADMIRATION

This carnation we offer to the trade as being one of the finest Carnations of any color that we know of up to date. Being a beautiful shade of pink, somewhat lighter than Winona, having that beautiful satin finish, always showing up well either in natural or artificial light. Plants benched in August are now coming into full crop, carrying from 10 to 20 buds. We have been cutting since September 10th. As a money maker you will find no equal.

The size of the flower is 3 to 3½ inches, excellent form, well built up in the center, with the petals so arranged as to make it stand the general requirements of a good fancy commercial variety. A grand keeper and shipper.

The habit is ideal, upright with no surplus grass and every shoot going into flower. Its freedom and earliness make it nearly the ideal carnation. The calyx is very tough and seldom bursts. Can be handled with great success either from the field or grown inside all summer. No one has to be an expert to handle this variety. It scored 86 points at the American Carnation Society meeting at Indianapolis, January 27 to 28, 1909.

Price, $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

Important Announcement to Carnation Growers

At the earnest solicitation of a large number of commercial and private growers, the Cottage Gardens Company has decided to disseminate this year the two famous Carnations

two varieties which are well known to all the leading growers of the country. 4 years' test in the New York market has demonstrated their popularity and good staying qualities. For the past three years we have been growing from 15,000 to 25,000 of each, during which time they have always commanded the highest market prices, and at no time has the supply been equal to the demand.

On the exhibition table they have taken the highest honors, and we believe it is safe to say these two carnations stand without an equal.

INVITATION

We extend a cordial invitation to all those interested to visit our establishment, where they will have an opportunity to see them growing and compare their good points with other standard varieties grown under the same conditions.

MRS. C. W. WARD

MRS. C. W. WARD is a perfectly formed flower with full center; color, deep pink, several shades lighter than Lawson, deeper than Winsor; having strong, erect stems 24 to 36 inches in length. A vigorous, healthy grower and has never shown disease of any kind.

A very early and free bloomer, producing fine flowers as early as September 1st, which bring from 25 to 50 per cent more than any other variety on the market.

The keeping qualities of this variety are remarkable. Several shipments of blooms sent to Europe reached their destinations in perfect condition, and wherever exhibited it has always been the last to show signs of wilting.

ALMA WARD

This beautiful Carnation is pure white except during dark weather, when it shows delicate splashings of pink similar to the Cattleya Orchid, increasing its popularity.

ALMA WARD is the largest and most fragrant Carnation ever grown, producing perfect flowers, 3½ to 4½ inches in diameter, on strong, erect stems 36 to 42 inches in length.

This most remarkable variety takes the same place among Carnations as the American Beauty Rose among Roses, and has, during the past 4 years, been awarded numerous prizes, including the following:

If you keep any record of the blooms you cut you will be able to appreciate the record Shasta has made this season thus far. Planted Aug. 1st, the plants have given us the following average: 1 bloom per plant in late September; 2 blooms per plant in October; nearly 3 blooms per plant in November, and December 1st to 16th, 1 7/18 blooms per plant. Notice the steady cut. It is absolutely a non-cropper and a non-splitter. Scored 89 points A. C. S. convention last January. Come and see it any time.

A SURPRISE

Was the superior quality of our Carnations in competition at the Chicago and Milwaukee Shows. To get good, vigorous plants that will produce quality, start right by getting good, healthy cuttings, grown under proper conditions and taken from strong, clean, healthy stock.

are conceded to be the best paying varieties to grow at the present time.

TWO GREAT WHITES

WHITE PERFECTION. Full flower, immense size, prolific on long, stiff stem.
WHITE ENCHANTRESS. The true pure white stock, will be a leader for some time to come.

WINSOR. The best pink in its color for general use.
VICTORY and BEACON. Two great reds of equal merit.
LAWSON ENCHANTRESS. A great improvement on Lawson, larger flower and long stemmed.
ENCHANTRESS. Still the leader in its class.
ROSE-PINK ENCHANTRESS. We have the true stock.
AFTERGLOW. An easy grower and popular variety. Strong, well rooted cuttings of the above varieties. $3.00 per 100; $25.00 per 1000.
O. P BASSETT. The latest red placed on the market. Per 100, $6.00; per 1000, $50.00.
MRS. CHAS. KNOPF. A well colored Enchantress, grows freely on erect stem, a good acquisition. $6.00 per 100; $50.00 per 1000.

Place your orders with us and get select stock, carefully packed, and satisfactory returns for your investment.

IN MICHIGAN.

Burt & Coggan, the Arcade florists, Battle Creek, recently held a successful flower show and many hundreds of people admired the fine display. Each lady was presented with a potted plant.

Frank V. Brown has opened new greenhouses at Lapeer and is developing a nice trade.

Fred J. Marquardt, florist at the Michigan Agricultural College, and Mrs. Diana Dingman, of Plainwell, have formed a partnership and will build greenhouses at Plainwell.

Fire destroyed the large greenhouse of Henry Zeller, near the county farm, Manistee. The loss was $2,500, with no insurance.

Miss Elva Davis, who started growing violets in one small house at Ionia, now has four large houses, with hot water heat. Last year an office building was added, followed this year by a cold storage room. Miss Davis is a graduate of the Michigan Agricultural College, and while there she gave her spare time to the study of floriculture.

The Grand Rapids Greenhouse Co., at Grand Rapids, has two and a half acres of lettuce to cut for the holiday trade. Prices are low, now ranging from 5 to 6 cents.

Walter Scott has completed a greenhouse at Plainwell and will make a specialty of winter vegetables.

Gerrit Wessink has built a fine greenhouse on his celery farm near Zeeland.

CARNATIONS

Rooted Cuttings

SCARLET GLOW. (New) an extra good bright scarlet, a large flower and exceptional keeping qualities. It is in perfect health, and has that early and free flowering habit that characterizes a paying commercial variety. $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

PINK DELIGHT. Clear waxy shell pink. The variety that won over Enchantress at the A. C. S. meeting, Indianapolis, January, 1909. It has all the good points to make it the leader and with its unequaled substance, the best keeping and shipping carnation in the light pink class.

In 1909 we had no surplus stock to offer. With our large stock this season we are in a position to take care of all orders. $6.00 per 100; $50.00 per 1000.

We have large stocks of White Perfection, Rose-pink Enchantress, White Enchantress, Winona, Enchantress, Aristocrat.

BEACON. Selected, healthy, well rooted cuttings, $3.00 per 100; $25.00 per 1000.

We do not supply the cheapest, but the best.

Sangamo

Brilliant, glistening pink. Winner wherever shown: Chicago, St. Louis and Milwaukee. The greatest bloomer and fastest grower of any. Flowers perfect, stems long and stiff.

Why You Should Grow SANGAMO

1st.—It will give you more blooms in a season than any other variety. The fastest grower we have ever seen. 2nd.—It is the best color of anything in this class, Winsor, Rose-pink Enchantress or any other. 3rd.—The blooms are well formed, nicely rounded out in the center, and do not fade. 4th.—The flower stands well above the calyx, making it impossible to split. 5th.—It comes early with long stems that are always stiff, holding the flower gracefully. 6th.—The entire stock is clean and healthy. The cuttings root easily and the plants lift from the field and establish themselves without a set-back. 7th.—Not only an exhibition variety, but the best bread and butter Carnation for any florist to grow. Let us pay your coal bill for you.

ROCHESTER.

The Market.

Business is fairly active, considering that, at this writing, Christmas is but a week away. As a usual thing, trade is extremely quiet until two or three days before the holiday. From the present outlook, stock will be quite scarce in this market, especially carnations, which are scarce even now, with a brisk demand. They are therefore stiffening in price; they are now bringing 3 cents to 4 cents and will no doubt advance rapidly by next week. With conditions such as these prevailing, it is highly probable that the trade, for once, will be spared having to handle a lot of pickled stock, which, despite the protests from time to time against the practice, seems to be still in evidence whenever the opportunity offers for an advance of a cent or two in the price.

Plants for Christmas trade also seem to be scarce, not being ready in time.

Ground pine is an unknown quantity, but there is plenty of laurel left, which will probably clean up next week. Holly is in good demand and no surprise will be expressed if it is a scarce article by the end of the week. H. B. S.

CANNAS AND GERANIUMS

We have as good a list of Cannas for florists' use as can be found; strong 2 and 3-eye divisions. Northern grown Cannas, divided from the clumps just before shipping, are far superior to stock shipped from the South. We firmly believe that Cannas divided early, packed in thin boxes and stored for weeks or months have lost much of their vitality before the grower gets them.

Beaute Poitevine, Crimson Bedder, Duke of Marlborough, Alphonse Bouvier, Egandale, Robert Christie, Florence Vaughan, Burbank, Papa Nardy, $2.50 per 100; $20.00 per 1000.

THE E. Y. TEAS CO., Centerville, Ind.

PHOENIX, ARIZ.

The annual flower show, held here recently, is reported to have been highly creditable and successful, decidedly the best in the three years since these shows were started. Horne & Armstrong had especially fine exhibits and won eleven first prizes.

All the flowers for the exhibits were cut from the open, as there are roses to cut outside here until February. During February the pruning is done, and it may be said that February is the only month when there are no roses to cut. Carnations, sweet peas, mums and violets are now in bloom outdoors. There was a little touch of frost a few nights ago, but it did not do much damage. Oranges may have been slightly affected by it, but not seriously.

INDIANAPOLIS.

The Market.

Business for the last week has been good, notwithstanding the fact that it was the week before Christmas, which is usually quiet. We have been experiencing some unusually cold weather for this time of the year, as the thermometer registered within a few degrees of zero a half dozen times in the last two weeks. Old Sol has been quite lenient with us, as he has shown himself for a number of days. The indications are that we are going to have a banner Christmas this year. Stock, I believe, is going to be plentiful, with the prices well up. Beauties are not especially good, particularly the medium grades, but Killarney are fine and no doubt will lead in roses. Carnations are plentiful and the stock is good. Poinsettias, valley, hyacinths and Paper Whites are in evidence, but there will be a shortage in sweet peas. Most of the violets will be shipped in from the Hudson river district. The green goods men no doubt are busy, as there is an advance in the price of holly and garland about every three or four days. There is a good supply of pot plants to be had. Some fine azaleas, Gloire de Lorraine begonias, poinsettias, cyclamen and primulas are to be seen.

Various Notes.

Baur & Smith are having a heavy cut of carnations for Christmas. This firm also has a fine bench of poinsettias.

E. A. Nelson has added a two-horse van to his equipment. He is showing some fine azaleas and cyclamen, also a bench of stevia and poinsettias.

At the recent meeting of the State Florists' Association, Meyer Heller of New Castle, Nixon H. Gano of Martinsville, and W. A. Rieman of Vincennes, were elected to membership.

H. W. Rieman has had trouble with the mite on his cyclamen this year. Mr. Rieman believes that he has a remedy for it, and there is no doubt that the plants are showing improvement since the remedy has been applied. The plants have been immersed in a solution of six spoonfuls of To-bak-ine and five gallons of water about once a week and have been watered with a weak solution of lime water.

Bertermann Bros. predict a large Christmas business, that is if the week previous signifies anything, as they have an unusual amount of work booked. This firm has as fine a lot of cyclamen and Gloire de Lorraine begonias as there is to be seen anywhere.

Select Ferns For Fine Store Trade

We offer a grand lot of exceptionally well-grown plants of the different varieties of NEPHROLEPIS, which will be found one of the best selling and most profitable plants that florists can handle.

Our stock is in unusually fine shape, and we will guarantee it will please the most exacting, as it is exceptionally good value at the prices quoted.

IMPROVED ELEGANTISSIMA. The finest of all this type. It was introduced by us in 1905. This form of Elegantissima has been greately improved, and shows no tendency to revert to the Boston, making it the most valuable fern of this type. Strong plants, 4-inch pots, $3.00 per dozen; 6-inch, $6.00 to $9.00 per dozen, according to size; 8-inch, $12.00 to $18.00 per dozen, according to size.

SUPERBISSIMA. Introduced by us in 1908. A very unique and distinct novelty. Its distinguishing characteristics are its dark green foliage and dense growth. Fronds are very heavily imbricated, making them very dense and compact. Strong plants, 4-inch pots, $3.00 per dozen; 6-inch, $6 00 to $9.00 per dozen, according to size; 8-inch, $12.00 to $18.00 per dozen, according to size.

BOSTONIENSIS, PIERSONI, WHITMANI, SCOTTII. Extra fine plants, 6-inch pots, $6.00 per dozen; 8-inch pans, $12.00 per dozen.

CANNAS.

Cannas, very extra list, big stock. Send list. C. Betscher, Canal Dover, Ohio.

We have as good a list of cannas for florists' use as can be found; strong 2 and 3-eye divisions. Northern grown cannas, divided from clumps just before shipping, are far superior to stock shipped from the south. We firmly believe that cannas divided early, packed in thin boxes and stored for weeks or months, have lost much of their vitality before the grower gets them. Beaute Poitevine, Crimson Bedder, Duke of Marlborough, Alphonse Bouvier, Egandale, Robert Christie, Florence Vaughan, Burbank and Papa Nardy, $2.50 per 100; $20.00 per 1000. King Humbert, $5.00 per 100. Many other varieties, but the above are a few leaders.
The Storrs & Harrison Co., Painesville, Ohio.

Will exchange Cinnabar, Papa Nardy, Pres. Viger, Louisiana, Paul Marquant, Mlle. Berat cannas for Black Beauty, Chas. Henderson, Duke of Marlborough, Cherokee, Niagara, St. Louis, Pres. McKinley, Pres. Cleveland, or Pres. Meyer cannas.
Wagner Park Conservatories, Sidney, Ohio.

500,000 CANNAS, 100 leading kinds, home-grown, $8.00 per 1000 and more. Price list free.
Shellroad Greenhouses, Grange, Balto., Md.

75,000 cannas, home-grown, true to name, $8.00 to $50.00 per 1000. Send for price list.

Insects and Insecticides.
By Clarence M. Weed, D. Sc. A practical manual concerning noxious insects and the methods of preventing their injuries. Profusely illustrated. A generally useful handbook on noxious insects. It covers the whole field of insect pests very thoroughly and is especially valuable for its complete and up-to-date methods of fighting insects. The work is intensely practical. All the important insect pests are described and remedies for them, and methods of preventing their injuries described in detail. Cloth. $1.50

Handbook of Plants and General Horticulture.
By Peter Henderson. This new edition comprises about 50 per cent more genera than the former one, and embraces the botanical name, derivation, natural order, etc., together with a short history of the different genera, concise instructions for their propagation and culture, and all the leading local or common English names, together with a comprehensive glossary of botanical and technical terms. Plain instructions are also given for the cultivation of the principal vegetables, fruits and flowers. Cloth. $3.00

Greenhouse Management.
By Prof. L. R. Taft, of Michigan Agricultural College. A manual for florists and flower lovers on the forcing of flowers, vegetables and fruits in greenhouses and the propagation and care of house plants. It treats of all the plants commonly cultivated by florists and amateurs, and explains in a thorough manner the methods that have been found most successful in growing them. Particular attention is paid to the growing of cut flowers, the growing of fruits under glass, etc. Of special value will be the directions for treating plants when attacked by insects and fungi. The preparation of the soil, the use of various manures, composts and fertilizers, watering, ventilating and heating receive careful and minute attention. Cloth. 400 pages. $1.50

The Market.

Business for the last few weeks has been rather backward, due to an oversupply of chrysanthemums and the invasion of this city by several of the leading cut flower fakers of Philadelphia, who occupy large stands in the city's main streets and local market houses. These fakers were selling roses at the rate of two for 5 cents, and carnations seven for 5 cents, while the top-notch Christmas price lists were about to go into effect. This is a deplorable state of affairs, and is greatly regretted by the local florists.

Open weather predominates and the outlook for mild holiday weather is favorable.

Various Notes.

Henry J. Huesman reports a fairly good outlook for the holidays. A choice line of blooming plants can always be seen at his establishment, together with large crops of smilax and sweet peas.

John H. Giles' store and greenhouse have taken on their holiday attire and present a magnificent appearance. Mr. Giles has been busy with several large wedding decorations, among the notable ones being the wedding of Miss Endlich, daughter of Judge G. A. Endlich, of this city.

Jacob A. Bauder, of Tenth and Windsor streets, who has been confined to bed on account of injuries received by being kicked by a horse, is able to be about again. Mr. Bauder has been especially busy on funeral work and has turned out some handsome designs during the last few weeks. His houses of carnations are in the best of condition and buds by the thousands can be counted in each house. These will be just right for Christmas.

The G. H. Hoskins Co. reports an encouraging outlook for the holidays. The firm's greenhouses at Wyomissing present their usual attractive appearance, and the plants and cut flowers for the holidays are in the pink of condition.

Heck Bros., of Wyomissing, have been extremely busy preparing their immense stock of holiday plants for shipment and local delivery. Gloire De Lorraine is seen here in all its grandeur. The plants in 3-inch to 5-inch pots and pans are a sight worth seeing. Their houses of carnations are just right for the holidays. This place is the home of the new pink chrysanthemum, Hawthorne. Large benches, with an abundance of cuttings of this variety, are being cared for with a view to spring delivery. Several other noted seedlings will also be sent out for trial.

The Market.

Merry Christmas! Every indication at present points to a Christmas business that will outclass all previous years. Christmas shoppers are beginning to realize the advantage of doing their buying earlier, and the flower store men of this city have also felt that the public is buying earlier this year. This is but Sunday, still a visit to the retail stores will show you many ferns, palms, jardinieres, etc., with "sold" tickets on them.

There is little to say about the cut flower stock. Flowers of every description have been none too plentiful for some time. Last week there was a big demand for valley, roses, violets, orchids, etc., as there were several debutantes. There was also considerable funeral work and it is a tough proposition to make up large designs with but few white flowers, and these worth their weight in gold. No doubt there will be plenty of flowers after Christmas.

There was much more truth than poetry in the paper of Charles Fox of Philadelphia, published in the REVIEW December 9. The writer got the opinion of several prominent store men of this city on this article and each one thought it splendid and hoped the time was not far distant when the growers would wake up to the fact that the outrageous prices asked at Christmas were most detrimental to our business.

The high price of ground pine has created a demand for laurel festooning, the latter being more in evidence than ever before. Many of the better stores are also becoming tired of ground pine garlands.

Various Notes.

A glance at some of the store windows of the florists this week is all that is necessary to tell one that it is Christmas time. Poinsettias, natural and almost natural, without which Christmas would be almost impossible, are of course the predominating feature in nearly every window.

In one of Breitmeyer's windows is a fine display of Dresden china. Sullivan's window is prettily trimmed with garlands, bells, poinsettias, etc. W. B. Brown is strong on brassware and is making a good showing of this.

An uncle of Herman Knope died in Chicago last week and Herman went to Chicago, intending to attend the funeral, but his own children being sick with scarlet fever he stayed but one day.

The Twentieth Century Club building was twice beautifully decorated this week. Monday the decorations were done by B. Schroeter and Tuesday by Breitmeyer's.

Greenhouse Heating.

NO FUEL SHORTAGE.

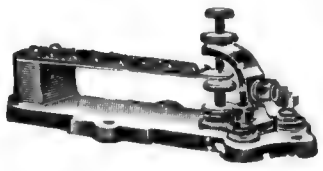
In order to relieve the mind of the public in the northwest and prove that there is no danger of a coal famine, the St. Paul roads have begun to haul coal from the Illinois fields to the Twin Cities in train loads. Enough coal will be poured into the northwest to prove that the railroads are able to handle all the fuel that is needed. For the purpose of further relieving the public apprehension which has arisen on account of the statements with respect to the coal situation, railroad managers have had a canvass made of the mines along their lines. The result is the statement that none of the Illinois mines is running full time, on account of the slack demand for coal.

STEAM FOR THREE HOUSES.

Enclosed you will find a plan of my greenhouses, which will be built next spring. I should like to know how to heat these with steam, and also what kind and size of boiler would be best. I should like a low pressure system. The boiler room will be five feet deep. The greenhouse walls will be of concrete, four and one-half feet high, with eighteen inches of glass in the south wall. The two large houses will have solid beds of concrete construction, one foot high. The houses will be used for chrysanthemums and sweet peas, or lilies. I am located in northern Illinois. J. R. F.

As near as can be determined from the plan, there are two houses about 24x117 feet and one house 12x117 feet. The ridge is nearly twelve feet high in the wider houses and nine feet high in the narrow house.

To heat these houses to 50 degrees a boiler with a rating of about twenty-five horse-power will be desirable, as, in addition to supplying 1,200 square feet of radiating surface for the greenhouses, there is a large office to heat. In the wider houses it will be well to run a 2-inch overhead main and then use eight 1¼-inch returns. The returns can be on the walls and along the side of the beds. In the narrow house it will suffice if one 2-inch flow and four 1¼-inch returns are used.



The boiler room is so shallow that it will probably be advisable to put in a steam trap. There are several excellent boilers advertised in the REVIEW.

HOUSE FOR GENERAL STOCK.

I have a house which I wish to pipe for hot water. It is 16x90 feet, four feet high at the sides and nine feet high at the ridge, with no glass in sides or ends. The flow pipe will have to run uphill from the boiler to the farther end. Where shall I connect the expansion pipe? The boiler pit is eight and one-half feet below the floor of the house.

I want to use 2-inch flows and 1¼-inch returns, as I have a lot of those sizes of pipe on hand. How much piping and

Metallic Thermometer "A"

SIZE—8 inches high, 4 inches wide, 2 inches deep. Case made of cast aluminum, highly finished.

This little instrument is an accurate, fully tested thermometer showing the correct temperature at all times, and combines a device which will ring a bell at your bedside when the greenhouse gets either too hot or too cold.

The florist needs protection against the overheating of his greenhouses as well as a protection against cold, for which we can highly recommend our type "A." This device serves both purposes, and at the same time indicates, as previously stated, the actual temperature in his greenhouse.

We guarantee that actual results will at all times be obtained. This device has been subjected to the severest tests in our laboratory, for over two years, and at the same time has given entire satisfaction, under all conditions, to many users in the trade.

All you have to do is to set the pointers at the highest and lowest temperatures you want, and the thermometer will do the rest. It will ring a good, loud bell when either point is reached.

This device saves all worry over trouble from sudden temperature changes.

Investigate it today.

The "National" Differential Temperature Alarm

SIZE—4 inches in diameter, 1½ inch deep. Casing made of Sheet Aluminum.

A sudden cold snap, or a rapid thaw, may mean hundreds of dollars' loss because your greenhouse gets too hot or too cold before you realize the sudden change that has occurred.

Protect yourself from such danger

Our Differential Temperature Alarm is specially designed for florists' use and is guaranteed to give absolute protection from the dangers before stated. Set the pointers at the highest and lowest temperatures desired and this device will positively ring a bell at your bedside when either point is reached.

Over 2,000 of these instruments are now giving complete satisfaction to florists throughout the country.

It is constructed of the very best material available for the purpose, and contains no complicated mechanism; hence serves its purpose a lifetime.

The pointers on face of instrument can be set so as to allow a difference between a possible increase or decrease of temperature of only two degrees. All that is necessary is to change position of pointers by loosening set screw in center so as to set the pointers or hands on face of dial; then tighten said set screw.

We also manufacture separate instruments; No. 1, to ring a bell when the house gets too hot; No. 2, to ring a bell when the house gets too cold. Of course, the most useful is the instrument illustrated above, which is a combination of both No. 1 and No. 2.

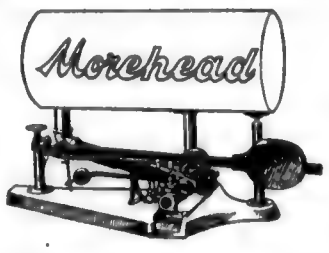
what size of boiler will be needed? Here, in southeastern New Hampshire, the temperature is seldom 15 degrees below zero. I want a house for a general line of plants for spring sales. I. F.

For a house of this length it is always best to use 2-inch pipe for the returns and 2½-inch for the flows, but with the deep boiler pit fairly good results should be secured with 1¼-inch pipe in the returns.

It will require about 650 square feet of radiation to furnish a temperature of 60 degrees, and for this it will be advisable to use a boiler with a radiation rating of 800 to 900 square feet. For the radiating surface use four 2-inch flows and twelve 1¼-inch returns. Instead of this, three 2½-inch flows and eight 2-inch returns could be used with better results. Connect the expansion tank with the main return.

A KENTUCKY RANGE.



I have leased a small range in Kentucky. It consists of one house, 18x100, in carnations; one house, 18x100, in chrysanthemums and sweet peas, and one house, 16x100, in roses. The houses are four feet to the gutters and ten feet to the ridge. They are heated with a 10-section hot water boiler, with a grate surface 20x32 inches. The piping is all 2-inch in the houses. In the carnation house there are twelve runs of pipe; in the mum house, ten runs of pipe, and in the rose house, eight runs. All the pipe is underneath the side benches, and in the carnation and mum houses the pipes have a drop of sixteen to eighteen inches in the 200 feet of piping. In the rose house the pipe runs uphill about sixteen inches in the 100 feet and drops back about the same amount.

Is the boiler large enough to carry these three houses? How much more piping, if any, is necessary in these respective houses to maintain 50 degrees in the carnation house, 45 degrees in the mum house and 60 degrees in the rose house? What plan would you recommend for the heating of these houses?

F. W. M.

In determining the capacity of a hot water heater a good deal depends upon the efficiency of the fire surface, and without knowing this it is not possible to tell definitely how much radiation a given heater can handle. However, as the area of the grate is only four and one-half square feet, it cannot be rated higher than 1,500 square feet of radiating surface, and it is probable that 1,250 feet would be enough for it, while the radiation now in the houses is 2,000 square feet. Under these conditions economical results should not be expected.

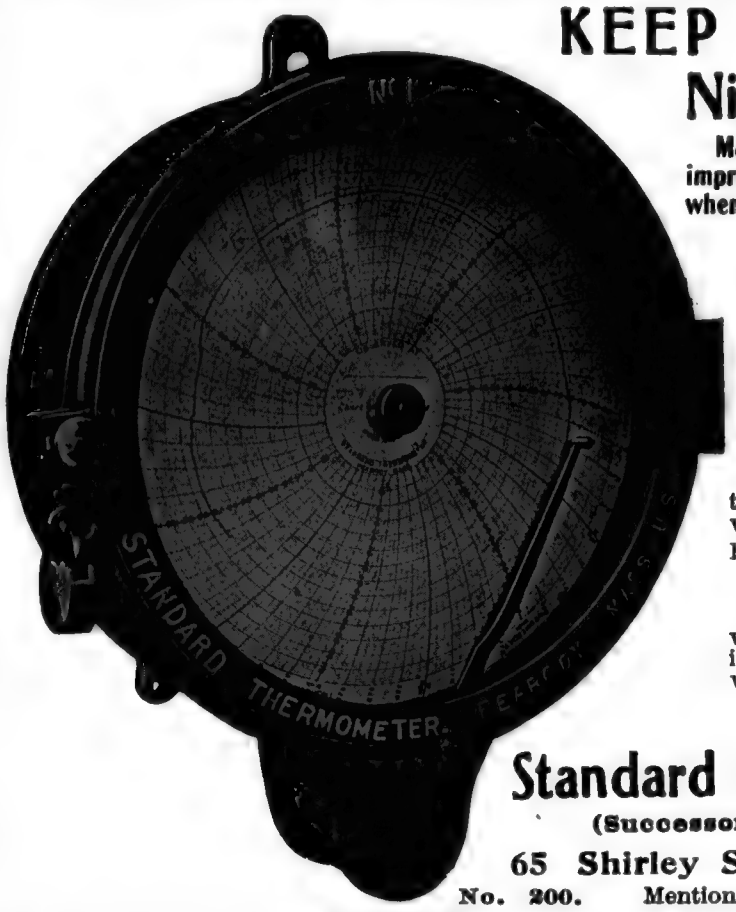
An even greater discrepancy is noticeable when the amount of radiation in the different houses is compared. The carnation house has fifty per cent more radiation than the rose house, although it is only two feet wider, and this difference in width is more than balanced by the higher temperature required for roses.



At the most only eight runs are required in the carnation house, and seven would answer for chrysanthemums, while to carry the rose house at 60 degrees at least ten runs of 2-inch pipe should be used. If the top of the heater is well below the level of the returns, fairly good results can be secured by using three of the 2-inch pipes as flows in each house, and the others as returns, but it will be even more satisfactory if two 2½-inch pipes are used as flows and five, six and eight 2-inch returns are used respectively in the chrysanthemum, carnation and rose houses.

SIZE OF MAIN FLOW.

How large a main flow will be required to furnish steam to 100,000 square feet of glass, the steam to be carried 300 feet from the boilers, with a pressure of twenty-five pounds? I am located in Indiana. A. R.

If the pipe is well insulated it need not be larger than 5-inch, although better results can be secured if a pressure of at least forty pounds is carried in the main flow pipe.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

The Market.

The rush on Christmas goods set in a few days ago and soon attained a volume seldom experienced in this city. Prices have stiffened for the holidays, but generally speaking there is a sufficiency for the demand, and the demand is sufficient to keep everybody moving. There has been an unusual quantity of greens of all kinds. Holly was plentiful and well berried; laurels were not so abundant but of good quality, and boxwood was par excellence.

Various Notes.

The annual meeting of the Newport Horticultural Society was held December 14, with an unusually large attendance. The following officers were elected: President, James Robertson; first vice-president, John P. Hammond; second vice-president, John Forbes; recording secretary, Daniel Coughlin; financial secretary, Andrew S. Meikle; treasurer, A. M. McMahon; sergeant at arms, William F. Smith; auditing committee, Bruce Butterton, W. Scott Sisson and Herbert Sisson; executive committee, James Robertson, John P. Hammond, John Forbes, Daniel Coughlin, Andrew S. Meikle, A. M. McMahon, Samuel Speers, Alexander McClellan, Charles Newton, C. M. Bogholdt, John Urquhart, Bruce Butterton, Patrick F. Reynolds and John Mackie.

O'Connor had the decorations for the Mauran-Lewis wedding December 15.

William Appleton, Jr., has been busy up to date on outside work. He still has ten men engaged in this, and six in his houses.

The stock of Walter Rogers, agricultural and horticultural supplies, Bank block, Hope Valley, was sold at auction by Trustee in Bankruptcy E. L. Crandall, December 17.

Prof. J. Franklin Collins, Brown University, gave an illustrated lecture on the evergreen trees of New England at the monthly meeting of the Rhode Island Horticultural Society, December 15. Secretary Smith was reported as being much improved.

Charles W. Littlefield picked arbutus blossoms in the open woods December 12, near Natick.

James Crawshaw, 403 Plainfield street, reports to the police that some one forced an entrance to his greenhouse by way of a rear door on the night of December 14. They were evidently frightened away, as nothing was missing, but the door was left open all night.

Carl Jurgens estate is erecting a block of four greenhouses about 200 feet in length in addition to the extensive range at Newport. They are to be put to summer roses.

William Hay was a visitor in Newport last week.

Nelson Pierson gave a roast duck supper December 15 to Mr. and Mrs. John F. Wood in honor of their recent wedding.

Samuel A. Woodrow, of the Fernwood Nursery, Stamford, Conn., was in the city December 18.

Charles H. Hunt has been rearranging the benching in his houses.

A PERFECT GREENHOUSE HOSE

FURNISHED in continuous lengths of 500 feet. An exceptionally high grade hose manufactured with a woven jacket insertion instead of cotton duck, and with specially selected rubber in the inner tube and cover.

The woven jacket construction makes a stronger hose than can be obtained from cotton duck, and absolutely precludes the possibility of cover opening at seam—a common cause of failure of hose made on cotton duck. This construction also gives a more flexible hose and reduces the possibility of kinking.

The Market.

Trade last week was good, with flowers none too plentiful. Carnations are rather scarce. Last week they were retailing at 60 cents to 75 cents per dozen. Some nice roses are coming in and are retailing at $2 per dozen and upwards. Mums are about all done. This has been a successful season for them, with good paying prices. Violets retail at $1.50 per hundred blooms; sweet peas retail at $1 per hundred blooms whenever there are any. Stevia, mignonette, alyssum and other fine flowers help out. Paper Whites retail at 60 cents per dozen. A few daffodils are to be seen, the first of the season here. There is a good demand for wreaths, etc. Christmas trees sell fairly well. The weather last week was quite cold, the nights being unusually cold, with good, clear sunshine most of the time through the day. Funeral work is good here, calling for lots of short and fancy stock.

Peter Murray is sending in some nice Lorraine begonias and azaleas from his Fairhaven place. W. L.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

We are having real winter weather this week, with the thermometer hovering around zero. There has been a shortage in some lines, especially in carnations and violets, but prices have averaged well and everything has moved freely in the commission houses. Carnations, as usual, have first call and wholesalers fear that there will be a big shortage for Christmas. Prices on choice stock will run up to $10 per hundred and perhaps above, while $6 to $8 will be the ruling prices for standard varieties. American Beauties, while not in heavy demand, have cleaned up daily. My Maryland, Killarney and Richmond at present are in fine shape and command top-notch prices.

Harrisii and callas are selling at from $10 to $15 per hundred and Paper White narcissus brings $3 to $4, while poinsettia gets $15 to $25 and valley $4 to $5. Violets had a steady call at $1 per hundred. Green goods of all kinds are plentiful and good holly moves readily at $4 per crate.

Various Notes.

The retail stores about town are now nicely decorated in holiday attire and some of them are unusually attractive.

Poinsettia, azalea and Gloire de Lorraine are seen everywhere and make a gorgeous display in the leading stores along Fourth street.

Lorraine and Pres. Taft begonias, from the J. A. Peterson establishment, were superb this season. Some specimen plants from this place measure twenty-four inches across, grown in 8-inch pans.

William Murphy, R. Witterstaetter and Tom Windram, all carnation specialists, went out one day last week to view Christ Murphy's new red carnation. They all speak highly of it as a producer and claim it will be a money-maker.

Charles Murphy has just completed a new house 30x100 for spring stock.

Miss Minnie Greensmith, age 24, died December 18 at the home of her parents at Covedale, after an illness of a week. She was an active worker in church circles and beloved by all who knew her. We extend to the bereaved family our sincere sympathy. H. Schwarz.

WASHINGTON.

The Market.

The Christmas rush is here and all hands are working overtime. The shops are pretty well stocked with plants of all descriptions, and all in pretty good shape, too. Present conditions seem to insure a satisfactory Christmas business.

Poinsettias are exceptionally good this season, with the supply unlimited. A few double poinsettias are to be seen, of exceptional quality.

Red carnations are quite scarce and a number of the retailers are not booking orders for Christmas delivery, having already sold their supply. Violets this season are of unusually good quality. The supply of roses will be limited. Sweet peas are in fine shape, with a fair supply.

A good many florists are making good use of the artificial poinsettias in their display windows. It is a question as yet undecided whether or not it is well to encourage the sale of artificial flowers. A customer may purchase a centerpiece of artificial poinsettias for her Christmas dinner table; after the affair is over, she stores them away for future use; the following year she hauls them out again, using them for the second or even the third time, and thereby the florist loses two or three sales of natural flowers. How does the florist profit?

Various Notes.

Mayberry & Hoover are quite busy with the Christmas rush, which necessitates the employing of extra help.

Henry Pfister, on Connecticut avenue, is busy with the trade of the elite.

Mrs. William Partridge has gone to her home in Cincinnati, O., to spend the Christmas holidays.

J. A. Peterson, the well known plant grower of Cincinnati, O., made his rounds among the florists of this city last week.

Z. D. Blackistone is able to be at his place of business again.

Marche & Co. are displaying a good looking lot of stock.

Theo. Diedrich, of Congress Heights, has a fine lot of single violets, which are readily salable in this market.

W. F.

ELIZABETH, N. J.—The undertakers and liverymen have combined against the holding of funerals on Sunday. The movement has the support of the clergymen and especially of the florists, who also gain a day of rest.

A Catalogue Worth Having

Our new Boiler Catalogue is a valuable book to any florist, large or small, and everybody who has a greenhouse ought to have one of them by all means. This catalogue tells you all you want to know about greenhouse heating and tells it in a simple manner, so that everything is easily understood.

One of our large customers wrote for six copies to give to his men—he said it would make them valuable employees.

The secret of success in market gardening is earliness. The Sunlight Double Glass Sash makes it easy to have the earliest and best plants. They will be ready as soon as the field is ready to receive them. The resulting crops will get the top-notch prices.

Sunlight Double Glass Sash lets in all the light all the time. Mats and boards for covering are no longer needed saving expense and labor.

Throughout the entire day the plants get benefit of the stimulating sunlight and earlier, better crops result.

The two layers of glass do the work. A ⅝-inch cushion of dry air between acts as a transparent blanket over the plants and protects them even in zero weather.

This Will Never Happen to Your House If We Build It

Nails rusted off—roof bars rotted out.

It's just the natural result of wooden eaves, nailed on roof bars and wooden posts. There's no wooden frame house that will stand a fraction the time that the Hitchings Iron Rafter house will—not to mention the difference in the amount of light that actually reaches the plants. The light, flat iron rafters and small roof bars make our house practically as light as day.

Don't be fooled into buying an out of date house for a little less money—it will cost more in the end.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

CHRISTMAS TRADE.

It could not be otherwise than that an extremely large volume of business would be done for Christmas, but the reports do not indicate anything of a record-breaking character in the middle west and west. It was better in the east. Pretty nearly everyone appeared to have all the business that could be handled, but in the end there proved to be enough stock to have supplied quite a bit more business, and the total of sales did not make the increase which had been expected. It was a good Christmas, without a doubt, and with a large number of individual establishments it was much better than any preceding, but, on the whole, the business probably did not greatly exceed that of last year in money value.

Many explanations are given for the failure to realize sanguine anticipations. There certainly were more flowers available for Christmas than in any other year. But this very abundance of material operated disadvantageously; it had not been foreseen and considerable stock failed to find the satisfactory sale it might have had if conditions had been a little more accurately gauged in advance. The season which turns the most money is the one in which demand is so close on the heels of supply that the odds and ends are sold, not the one in which stock is so plentiful that the special long, fancy, high-grade stock fails to realize its full value.

There are those who say that the retail business suffered because of too much prosperity in the country. These are the ones who found that the Christmas business in the hard-times years was surprisingly good. In those years it was explained that the people accustomed to spending large sums for Christmas, finding themselves pinched, instead of making hundred-dollar gifts of jewelry made five-dollar or ten-dollar gifts of flowers. This year the statement is that the free spenders again had the price of jewelry and neglected the florists.

Another explanation is that the public has now come to be well aware of the increase in the price of cut flowers at Christmas and prefers to buy its cut flowers at other times. In support of this argument, it is pointed out that the plant business is steadily increasing, and made another gain this year. One interesting point is that the retail florists are beginning to comment on the advances in prices which the plant growers have been making of late.

But the largest adverse factor in the Christmas business was the great storm which swept over the country last week. The storm was general, extending from the Rocky mountains to the Atlantic seaboard. Beginning in the southwest, it struck some important flower consuming cities two days in advance of Christmas. It passed over the Mississippi valley December 24 and 25, largely curtailing the business of the day before Christmas, usually the best retail day in all the year. And it cut off the Christmas morning buying almost altogether. In the extreme east the trade was fortunate in that the storm did not come until after the Christmas business had been done, on Christmas day and the day following, when many eastern cities had the heaviest December snowfall ever recorded. The best reports come from the east, from the cities that were not affected by the blizzard. Farther west the storm not only interfered with buying, but it added to the work of wrapping and delivery. It is said that the snowfall reduced the efficiency of a delivery outfit to one-third what it would have been in milder weather and without snow.

But, taking it by and large, the Christmas business should be considered generally satisfactory. If it made no new records for the trade at large, it certainly would have to be called good business, viewed from whatever point.

Basket of Foliage Plants.

GROWN-UP FERN DISHES.

In all the work of the retail florist there is nothing he is oftener called upon to do than to fill fern dishes for table use. The popularity of the fern dish suggested to one inventive retailer that he might be able to do business by filling larger receptacles for use somewhere else than on the dining-table. The result was that he took some twig baskets, fitted with tin pans, and filled them with small plants, principally ferns, but including small palms, cyrtomium, dracænas, pandanus and similar stock. Displaying three or four of these about the store, each one as different as possible from the others, he found they not only sold well, but, just like the fern dishes, the baskets came back in time to be refilled. Now this retail florist keeps these baskets before his customers — grown-up fern dishes, one of his customers called them —just as he keeps fern dishes on his counters.

DECORATING IN SMALL TOWNS.

Estimate of Cost.

No matter what the occasion may be, whether a new cafe is being opened, society is having some doings, or the belle of the village is to be married, you will always find that some florist has had his finger in the pie. Although the above-mentioned affairs call for entirely different kinds of floral work, we will now confine ourselves to the decorations for the home wedding of the prettiest lass in the village.

Years ago the florist in a small city had not the opportunity of knowing just what was wanted in the way of decoration for affairs of this kind, which are not a daily occurrence in the country, but with the advent of the trade paper and the convenience of getting into the nearest larger city on the interurban lines, our rural brother is far better informed.

First of all, what should we charge for such work? We are asked to call at the home of Miss Soon-to-be-wed and give her folks some idea as to how much a simple decoration will cost. We find the marriage ceremony is to be performed in the parlor. The bridal party is not a large one, so from twelve to eighteen palms will be sufficient for a nice background. There is also a fireplace, which will not be used. This should be nicely filled with plants. There are no gas fixtures, but there is a stairway which needs a little trimming. In the dining room we suggest to the customer that some smilax on the sideboard would look well.

The table is an oval one, to seat eighteen guests. It is four feet wide and eight feet long. White roses are to be used on the table in the shape of a mound; also four small vases near the corners. Another suggestion is that a vase of white chrysanthemums be used on the piano and several bouquets of mixed flowers in other rooms.

Now let us make a rough estimate:

Bank of palms, from $5 to $7.50.
Fern plants in fireplace, $2 to $3.
Smilax and ribbon on stairway (about four smilax and four or five yards of chiffon), $2 to $3.
Three smilax on sideboard, 75 cents.
Centerpiece of white roses, using 12-inch plateau (oval), $3 to $4.
Two dozen roses for small vases, $2 to $2.50.
Vase of white mums, $2.50 to $3.50.
Two bouquets, $2.
Total, $19.25 to $25.75.
We will say from $20 to $28 for the whole decoration.

If you are a florist in a large city, where there is much competition, you may be told that some other florist has offered to do the work for less. The florist in a little town, having practically no competitors, has nothing like this to contend with.

Perhaps your customer will suggest some slight changes in your plans. She will also want some idea as to the cost of the bride's and bridesmaids' bouquets, so be prepared to give an estimate on these.

Arrangement of Plants.

The wedding takes place the following Thursday at 7:30 in the evening, which gives plenty of time to order what flowers you need from the nearest city that has a commission house. Still, do not put it off until the last minute. It would also be well to look over your stands and pot covers, for, not having been used for some time, they may need a little cleaning. A small decoration like the foregoing can easily be finished in one morning.

When you unload your plants at the house, first lay some newspapers on the floor where the plants are to stand temporarily, so as not to soil the carpet or floor. Arrange the palms first of all, so as to get them out of the way. In the group of palms you must avoid even lines at the top. Start with a few tall, slender plants, set high upon stands, gradually working down to the floor. Try different palms in different places in the group. Often a palm will not seem to fit a certain place, while one perhaps a little more bushy will look just right. Turning a plant around may also help you to place it to the best advantage. Every pot which shows in the group should be hid with a pot cover. These covers can be bought at the florists' supply houses, are inexpensive and will last for many years if given an occasional coat of paint.

When through placing the palms, arrange the plants in the fireplace. Being considerably larger than the fireplace in a city home, it will take four or five plants to fill it nicely. Place a tall, slender palm well back in the fireplace, in such a position that it will protrude at one corner of the opening, while its leaves spread out gracefully. Then fill in with the other plants, using a little variety if possible. This may sound easy, but often you will have to rearrange the plants several times before the desired effect is obtained. Crumpled up newspaper will help to keep the plants where you want them.

Use Smilax and Flowers.

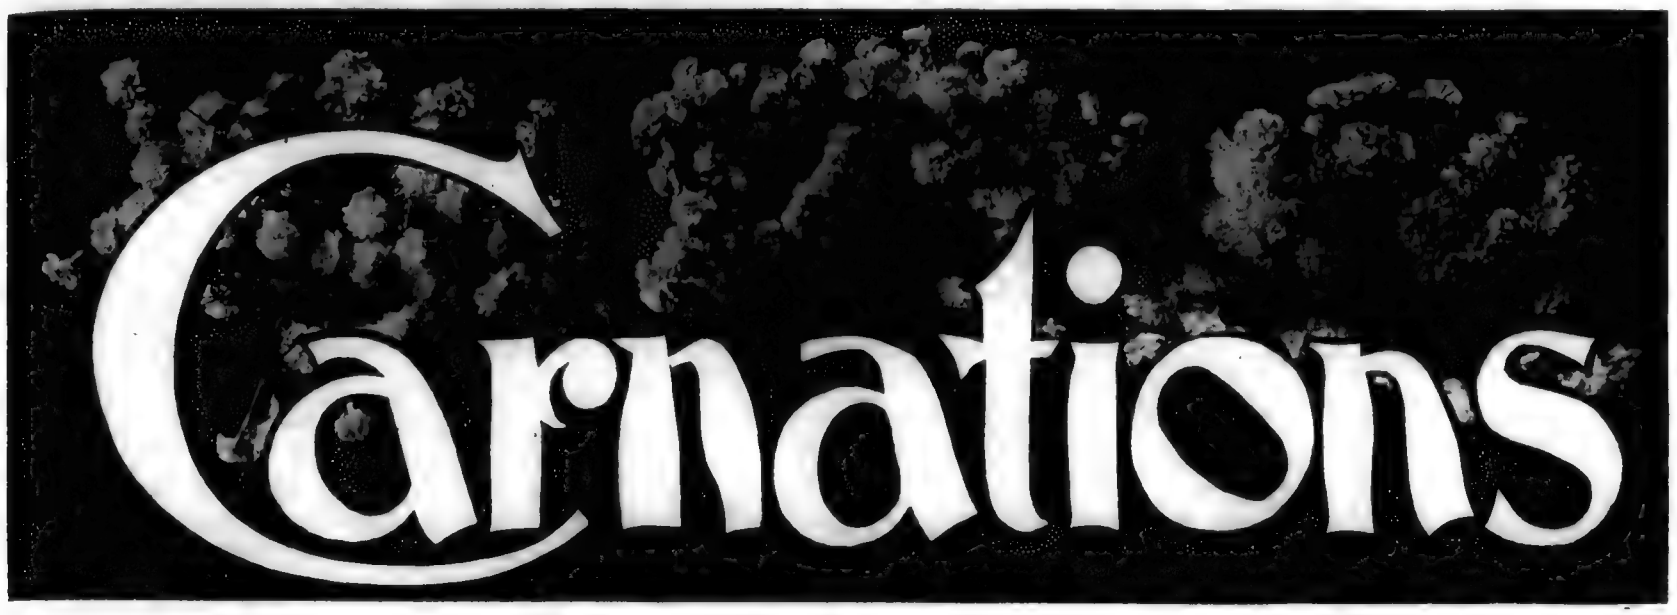
You are now through with the plants and any remaining ones should be set to one side, out of the way. On the stairway we will hang some smilax, fastening it to the railing and allowing it to hang in natural loops. Where the ends are brought together a pretty bow of chiffon will look well.

The sideboard should be prettily festooned with smilax. If there are posts on each side, twine some green around these. You will find strong pins handy in fastening smilax or other greens. Where possible, the pins should be driven into cracks or where two pieces of wood meet, so as not to leave any marks when removed.

You are now through with the decorating and can arrange the flowers. If, to save a second trip, you brought the flowers with you, of course it is advisable to put the cut flowers in water upon arrival. The centerpiece should be put in a cool place until you are ready for it. Our centerpiece this time is in the form of a low mound of white roses. After putting it in place, arrange a few sprays of green (asparagus if you have it) around it. Then put six roses in each small vase, placing one of the vases on each corner of the table. You will have to use your judgment as to how far from the center they should be. See that the table looks well balanced. A little of the asparagus scattered over the table will not be amiss. Place the flowers in vases where they will be most effective, always keeping the colors of the decoration in mind, that these may not clash with the flowers.

Before leaving, see that you have cleaned up the worst of the dirt you have made and consult with the person from whom you received the order. Find out if all is satisfactory. H. S.

Wedding Decoration by Boatwright's Floral Co.



SOME CLASSIC DECORATIONS.

At a recent fashionable wedding, held in St. Paul's Episcopal church at Augusta, Ga., the decorations were designed and arranged by Boatwright's Floral Co., of North Augusta, S. C. The decorations were unusually chaste and elegant, and in excellent harmony with the classic interior of that fine old church. They are not shown to the best advantage, however, in the photograph here reproduced, but have a little of what the Boatwright decorator refers to as a "flat" appearance, though the plants were all specimens, comprising a seaforthia twelve feet high and dracænas of large size.

The railing was banked with variegated vinca and ivy in pots. Ferns were banked at the ends of the steps. The screen in front of the altar was of smilax and the bar that supported the bells was hung with the same material. Hundreds of candles, which are not distinctly shown in the picture, were used. Prize blooms of Silver Wedding mums were placed on the altar and in large vases. The bells were not only covered with pompon mums, but were also lined with them, and each clapper was a specimen mum.

The most flattering part of this order was that it was not accompanied by specific directions or suggestions, and the family or friends did not have a glimpse of the decorations until they arrived for the ceremony. Under such conditions, of course, the designers could do their best, for confidence is always a tonic and brace to an artist.

The Boatwrights have lately done a great deal of decorating for occasions that demanded a high grade of work. At the banquet recently tendered President Taft by the Chamber of Commerce of Augusta at Hampton Terrace hotel, the floral arrangement was designed and executed by the Boatwrights. This firm also furnished the exquisite decorations for the Chamber of Commerce when that organization banqueted the late Mr. Harriman at the Country Club in Summerville, the happy hunting ground, or rather golfing ground, of Taft and Rockefeller.

CARNATION NOTES.—EAST.

New Varieties.

The year 1910 promises to open with about the usual number of aspirants to commercial success in the carnation field, and it would seem, from the reputed parentage of these new introductions, that we have an excellent list to choose from. Much, however, depends on the manner in which new varieties are handled in their changed surroundings. This is fully as important, probably, as the treatment received at the hands of the introducer before and during dissemination. But the question at present is, what to purchase.

It might be said that one could not go far wrong with any in the list, and every grower would perhaps be pleased to include all new ones sent out each year, but this is not only impossible, but really impractical from a commercial point of view. It is impossible because the average grower cannot afford it at the price. That is, he is unable to purchase a larger quantity of each than would merely suffice to satisfy his curiosity, and when this has been accomplished he is still without sufficient stock from which to propagate in quantity, thus revealing the impractical side.

When and What to Buy.

It does not pay to grow too many varieties; the producer of cut flowers must be prepared to furnish blooms of a color and form in considerable quantity, which requires relatively large blocks of few varieties rather than a large assortment of kinds with a smaller proportion of each.

To my mind, the matter of what to purchase revolves on the question of what one needs, rather than what may be desired. Wide-awake growers cannot fail to perceive deterioration in a variety as soon as it begins; neither can the fact escape his notice when a variety's popularity begins to wane. Then we would say there was need of a purchase. It follows that it is not advisable to wait until the variety to be displaced is down and out, but start at once the building up of a stock of your own propagation. This will require at least 250 plants, if one wishes to avoid the disadvantages of being obliged to use everything that it is possible to root and the resultant evils of overpropagation.

Make Haste Slowly.

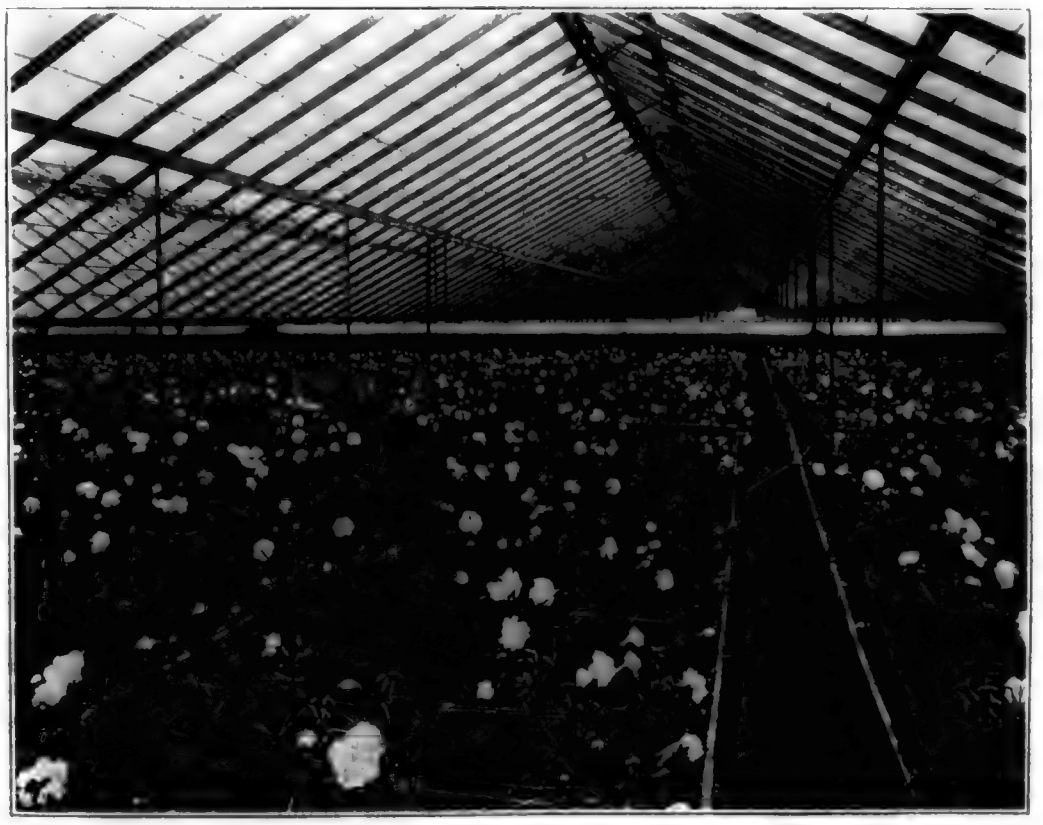
Without the least desire to criticise the introduction price of new varieties or the reliability of our worthy disseminators, it is my advice to the grower who feels unwarranted in purchasing 250 cuttings at from $75 to $100 per thousand, that he delay the matter for a year.

We should not lose sight of the fact that if a variety proves to possess real merit or superiority over others, these qualities are certain to be discovered. There need be no anxiety on the part of the disseminator as to the ultimate result of his venture. The grower can rest assured that all the revenue from a good sort cannot be gotten in one year, and he need not experience any guiltiness of conscience, as if he were necessarily behind the times.

The foregoing presents, of course, only the hard, practical business side of the matter and must not be taken in any sense as intended to discourage the purchase of new varieties. Rather let us hope that the holiday returns may provide the means. GEO. S. OSBORN.

POLLWORTH'S PERFECTION.

The C. C. Pollworth Co., Wilwaukee, has had an exceptionally successful season to date with its carnations. The accompanying illustration shows its house of White Perfection, photographed just before Christmas.



Another interesting feature of the picture, besides the crop of bloom, is the main flow pipe shown crossing the house. Two of these large flows run across the range, giving excellent control of the heat. The pipes are heavily covered with asbestos, so that there is little heat given off from them.

DOUBLE PETUNIAS FOR SPRING.

Will double petunias come double from seed and make good plants for spring trade if planted now? F. C. A.

Seeds of the double petunias are secured by hybridization, but only a small proportion of them can be depended upon to come double. If you have plants of good doubles, propagation by cuttings is the only way to perpetuate them. If you decide to purchase the best quality of so-called double seed, be sure when pricking off the seedlings to take special care of the smaller and weaker ones, as these are more likely to be double than the vigorous ones. If you start your petunia seed in January, you will have large, stocky plants for spring sales. C. W.

Geraniums

GERANIUMS FOR SPRING.

What is the best method for growing geraniums so as to have them in bloom during the latter part of April until Memorial day? We are now shifting into 3½-inch to 4-inch pots. Is it best to pinch out all buds? If so, how late in the season? Is it all right to use any fertilizer? If so, what kind? Last year we used liquid cow manure and had fine, stocky geraniums, but shy bloomers during the season above mentioned.

A. O. N.

You are shifting your plants into 3½-inch and 4-inch pots somewhat early. At present the bulk of stock intended for spring sales is in 2½-inch to 3-inch pots, and the final potting into 4-inch pots I prefer to postpone until about the last part of February, or even later. From eight to ten weeks is sufficiently long for the plants to be in the larger size pots. Afford your plants a night temperature of 45 degrees, free ventilation and all possible sunshine. Use moderately heavy loam for the last potting. Cut out leaf-mold and substitute some old, well-rotted cow dung. This may form one-fifth to one-fourth of the whole. Also use a 3-inch pot of fine bone to each bushel of soil.

When the plants want some stimulating, the use of liquid manure will promote leaf growth, but not floriferousness. A top-dressing of a high grade chemical, such as Clay's fertilizer, or a little fine bone mixed with loam, promotes a harder growth and makes the plants flower more profusely. Avoid overwatering, as it makes the plants soft. Let them dry out well between the waterings. This tends to make the growths firmer. Pick off all flower buds until about a month or six weeks before you want your plants in bloom. Geraniums like a rather dry atmosphere and do not need syringing overhead for insect pests. Spread them out frequently so that they do not crowd. If left too close, the result will be moldy and yellow leaves and plants which are the reverse of stocky.

GERANIUM FLOWERS FADING.

We are growing some geraniums, and as soon as the flowers open the edges begin to turn a kind of purple and it spoils them entirely. The trouble even begins on the buds showing color and all varieties look the same. Our house runs east and west, with 24-inch glass in sides. We have hot water heat and raised benches. We keep a night temperature of 52 to 55 degrees. We had the same trouble last spring. Can you tell us what the trouble is?

A. E. P.

Your house, temperature and other conditions would seem all right for growing good geraniums. For bedding stock wanted for spring sales the temperature should be 6 to 10 degrees lower, but if you are growing plants to flower now, 52 to 55 degrees at night will answer well, provided that you ventilate freely on every possible opportunity. The early fading out of the flowers we cannot understand. Have you been using sulphur freely on the pipes? This would bleach out the flowers in the way you speak of. We would advise running the house at least 5 degrees cooler. Air freely. Let the plants dry out well between waterings and, if any show signs of starvation at the roots, use some Clay's fertilizer or weak nitrate of soda water to tone them up.

POLYGONUM BALDSCHUANICUM.

Noticing the article on Polygonum Baldschuanicum in the Review of December 16, and also the request for information regarding it, I would state that I have handled these vines commercially for several years, and they have given the best of satisfaction here in Colorado and in other western states.

I procured one of the first plants sent out by Henry A. Dreer and it is now an immense, fine plant. This plant is growing in a much exposed situation; in fact, it has no protection except the naked branches of the tree on which it climbs. Yet, in spite of the fact that our winters are quite trying, this plant has never been injured by winter freezing. It blooms freely throughout the summer, and I consider it as hardy as the common woodbine.

I regret much that it cannot be placed on the market at a lower figure. As I understand it, we are dependent upon Europe for our supply and it has not been successfully propagated by growers on this side, either from seed or cuttings. It would seem to me that the propagation of this vine would be well worth the attention of some of our growers who follow this line.

The plant seeds freely, and each spring I find a few seedlings under and around the large plant already referred to. These seedlings make fine plants, but there are only a few of them. Seeds, however, that I have gathered and sowed, both in the greenhouse and outside, have failed to germinate. Of course, this is a little out of my line. Yet I am wondering why I have failed. Can anyone explain?

W. W. Wilmore.

In the Review of December 16, page 39, a correspondent describes Polygonum Baldschuanicum, especially as seen in France by George C. Perkins, of Jackson & Perkins, on a recent visit to that country. The correspondent says that the plant is vigorous in growth and strikingly decorative. It may be in France, but not near Boston, Mass. I tried it for two successive years. It made but little growth during summer, although well protected, and it failed to live during winter. Perhaps it might do well farther south. I should like to hear about the experience of others with this plant.

Chrysanthemums

MUMS FOR CHRISTMAS.

In the Review of December 9, page 20, H. J. H. inquires as to the best way of handling Nonin mums in order to have a good crop of them for Christmas.

We have excellent success with cuttings lifted from the sand the last week in July. They can be benched immediately, or, if the benches are not ready, they can be potted up for benching up to the last week in August. But, whether they are in pots or benches, they must be given good treatment and kept growing right along. Nonin is a heavy feeder, requires generous treatment and pays for it.

We find that six inches each way is ample room for single stems, and this spacing gives nearly twice as many flowers as eight inches each way. If you are short of stock and can plant by July 15, you can plant 8x8 inches and top the plants back so as to grow two or possibly three flowers to the plant, but single stems 6x6 inches will be better.

You can prolong the season of a bench of Nonins two or three weeks by rubbing off the first buds on the later plants and taking the later buds.

We are immensely pleased with J. Rosette for a Christmas crop. Planted in the same way as Nonin, it makes a graceful 6-inch to 7-inch flower, of deep Daybreak color. It is a good keeper and our customers like it.

GOLDEN GLOW IN ENGLAND.

J. W. Cross, the big florist at Wisbech, England, who is a brother of Eli Cross, Grand Rapids, Mich., is this year featuring the American chrysanthemum, Golden Glow. He calls it "the money-maker for 1910," and says:

"This is easy to grow, and the bloom easy to sell; nothing in the market to detract from its value. It is evidently one of the best introductions for the commercial florist. A contemporary states: 'If it was grown largely this season, there is no question that at least three times as many will be grown next season. It is a chrysanthemum for everybody. It can be had in bloom at almost any time from spring till November, and the flowers are always good.' I have myself been cutting it during August, September and October and making excellent prices on the bloom. I can safely say that this has proved one of the best chrysanthemum investments I have ever made, and you will say the same after giving it a trial this next season. It is a splendid, rich yellow, a vigorous grower and continuous bloomer, as noted above—three months' continual cutting, and during this time it commands the highest prices on the market, because it is out of the ordinary midseason varieties and is unusually attractive, being such a large, bright yellow; a good feature also is its long stems and bloom of magnificent form. In fact, it is all that could be desired for the money-making of 1910."

CHRYSANTHEMUM GOLDEN GLOW

If Golden Glow mums are ready to pot at this date, what date will they bloom? I want them for pot plants. F. C. A.

Chrysanthemum Golden Glow can be cut from early in August until October. A batch of plants in the same bench will not, as a rule, come in at one time, as do the majority of mums. This uncertainty is making some growers go slowly on growing this useful early variety. We have not had much success with Golden Glow as a pot plant. If you grow it in bush form, it will probably be in good bloom about the middle of September. A few we tried this year flowered about September 20, but were not exactly a success. There are other early mums, such as Carrie, Louis Lemaire and Horace Martin, which make fine pot plants for use in late September and early October.

C. W.

TO FOLLOW MUMS.

Thousands of mums are grown at the Bakerstown establishment of the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co. Among the favored varieties are Ivory, Maud Dean, Robert Halliday, Mayor Weaver, Bonnaffon, Eaton, Helen Frick and Golden Wedding. Helen Frick from late propagation and planting was in its perfection December with stems short and stiff, foliage full from ground to neck, and blossoms finely finished. Nonin would be a splendid late were it not for its unhealthy foliage. Some anemones and singles also find favor. "Retail florists doing a select trade do not want the enormous exhibition flowers we often aim to give," said Mr. Burki; "they prefer superfine medium-sized ones."

Plants for stock are lifted from the benches and put thickly into flats and these set wherever room can be spared for them. Some of the benches vacated by chrysanthemums are now filled with Grand Rapids lettuces, and others are being prepared for propagating carnations, and to hold potted Manetti stocks.

FREY'S SINGLE MUMS.

At Crown Point, Ind., Alois Frey, formerly head gardener at Lincoln park, Chicago, is now conducting a commercial greenhouse establishment, featuring the specialties for which he gained a reputation while in charge of the Chicago park greenhouses. Primulas and cinerarias always have come in for a large share of Mr. Frey's attention, and for years he has given more or less time to the pompon and single chrysanthemums, being one of the first in this country to take up the small mums in a large way. Since locating at Crown Point, Mr. Frey has raised a large number of seedling single mums. With these he has been exceptionally successful, and last season he put on the market, through Elmer D. Smith & Co., and other chrysanthemum specialists, a set of twenty-two single varieties raised at Crown Point. These had previously been exhibited at the National Flower Show, where they won a silver cup. Mr. Frey has raised and tested hundreds of varieties. The accompanying illustration shows one end of his house of singles this season. Most of these really are singles, having but one or two rows of petals. The coloring runs through the entire range in the flower. Light shades predominate, white, Enchantress pink and cream, and Mr. Frey also has raised some excellent bronzes, while some of his reds are among the brightest known to the trade.

Mr. Frey has selected a number of sorts in addition to the twenty-two put on the market last year, which will be sent out next season.

SWEET PEAS AND SNAPDRAGONS

What is a good temperature for sweet peas and snapdragons at night, also during the day? My soil was mixed well with cow manure and old sod before filling in September. Do you think they should have feed later? What is best, cow manure top-dressing or bone meal, or something else? C. S. L.

For sweet peas when flowering, a night temperature of from 48 to 50 degrees is about right. Snapdragons will do well in a similar temperature, but can be grown 5 degrees cooler with excellent results, if so desired. The soil you have used could not be better. Neither of the plants named should require feeding in any form yet. If the sweet peas are in raised benches, they will require feeding earlier than if in solid beds. Cow manure, well decayed, makes a good article for top-dressing; loosen the soil before applying it. We would wait a month before using any. Fine bone and sheep manure also are good fertilizers. When used, fork over the soil lightly after applying it, before watering. Go slowly on feeding during midwinter. C. W.

MOSCHOSMAS FOR MARKET.

Will you tell us just how to propagate, grow and handle moschosmas, and how to carry over the stock? Is it profitable to grow them, either as pot plants or for cut flowers? N.

Moschosmas are propagated readily from the old plants. When they are through flowering, the shoots, if any are left, can be trimmed back almost to the center stem and then the plants can be set under a bench or anywhere until early spring, when the eyes will begin to push out. Then the old plants can be taken up, repotted and watered and will in the course of a few weeks throw an abundance of young cuttings, which will root readily in the sand in conjunction with roses or almost any other kind of cuttings being propagated at that season. After they are rooted and potted they can be grown outside and lifted in the fall, or carried along in pots, as the grower may wish. The plant is of a more or less branching habit, and, if it is pinched once or twice in the early summer, will assume a graceful form.

As to whether it is a profitable plant to grow, I cannot say. Some florists who sell all their own stock have written me enthusiastic letters about this plant, but it seems to be generally established that a man growing plants for the wholesale market cannot handle this plant with profit, as the tiny flowers are inclined to drop off if they have to be shipped any long distance by express or are given rough treatment. I know florists who are using this in funeral work as a cut flower and like it very much.

It is one of the easiest plants to grow that I know of. Neither mildew nor insects bother it in the least degree. It should not receive too much water or the leaves are apt to drop, but outside of that there is no trouble whatever in handling it. The plant flowers naturally for Christmas and, were it red instead of white, would undoubtedly be largely grown. Chas. H. Totty.

BURKI'S NOTES ON VARIETIES.

At the greenhouses of the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co., at Bakerstown, Pa., they have tried almost every promising new rose placed on the market, and today they are down to the Killarneys, My Maryland and Richmond as main crops, a limited number of Bride and Bridesmaid and a bench of Beauty for stock purposes. Mr. Burki's opinion of the varieties is about as follows:

Killarney.—The best pink rose we have, and a special favorite with high-class retail florists. It is healthy, vigorous, prolific; every bloom has a stiff, erect stem, even the seconds, and they do not show any of the arching or drooping necks peculiar to Bride and Maid. He has benches of it, all sizes from four years—his original stock—to one-year plants, and all in fine condition.

White Killarney.—In every feature of habit, growth and blooming, except color, identical with the original Killarney. In summer the white has a pinkish tinge, but in winter this tint disappears altogether, and the flowers are perfectly white. The finest white forcing rose in existence.

My Maryland.—Is a fine rose, but it does not have the keeping qualities of Killarney. It makes all flowering wood, stiff and strong, and never takes mildew. Further, it is a capital summer rose.

Richmond.—Is a splendid rose, and by far the best of its color, but can sell only a limited number of them except at the holidays, and then could sell more than can be grown.

Brides and Bridesmaids.—They have several benches, but they declare these must go in favor of Killarneys. They do not give more than forty per cent of really good flowers; the seconds have drooping necks "and we can't sell seconds any more." The plants produce more poor, blind wood than do the Killarneys, and young plants raised from such inferior wood cannot give as good results as those from strong growths.

The Stott nozzle.—In hosing the roses I observed the spray was extremely fine, reaching under and over, to every part of the plant. The spray was from a Stott nozzle. "It is the best nozzle we ever had," Mr. Burki assured me, "but we can't buy it now; it isn't manufactured any more; we get ours made a-purpose for ourselves at the brass works in town here. You need a heavy pressure of water, however, to use it to advantage."

Wm. Falconer.

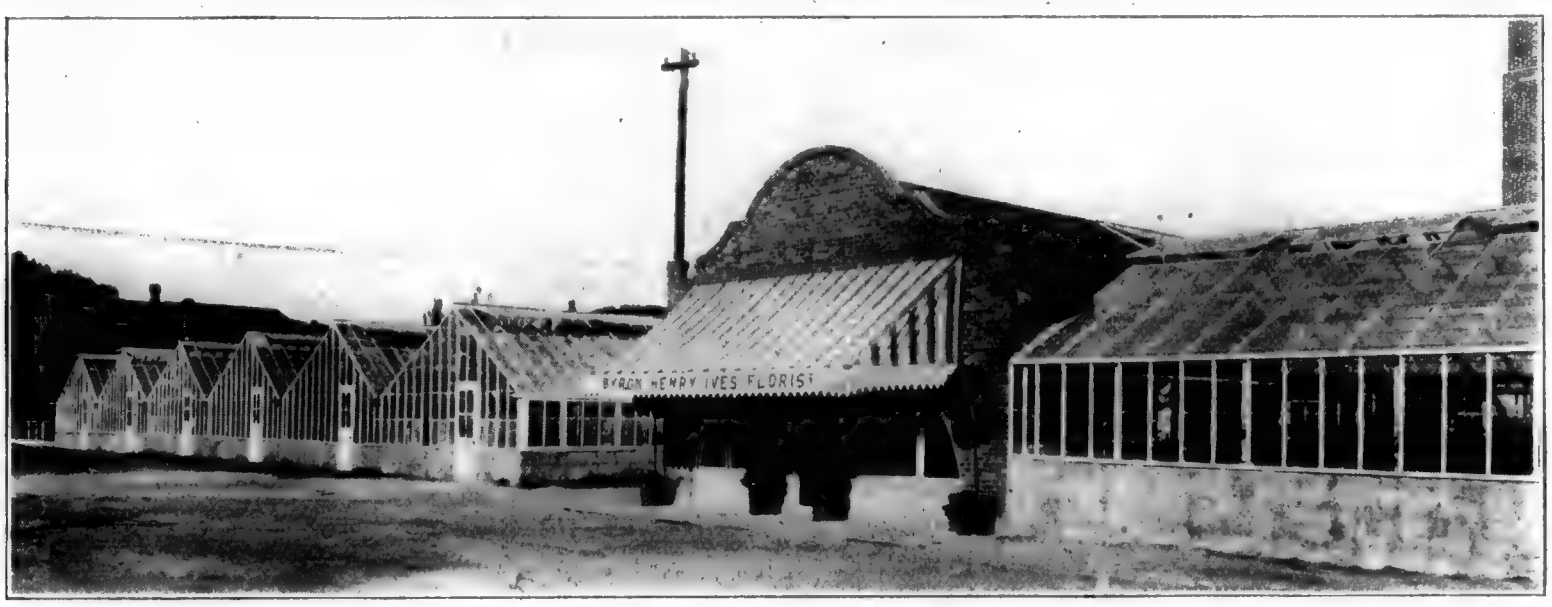
[A few weeks ago a reference to the Stott nozzle brought the Review a number of inquiries as to where it could be obtained. Several of the supply houses once listed it at $1 each, but it is not now offered; however, one grower reported having been able to procure the nozzle recently from Stumpp & Walter Co., New York, who had quite a stock on hand when the manufacture was discontinued, and who still have a few left. Any who can supply the Stott nozzle should let the trade know it.—Ed.]

Naperville, Ill.—Chas. Rohr is sending his customers a 1910 calendar with his portrait on it.

A NEW WAY TO TIE.

Joseph Volz & Son, the growers a Cincinnati, have been experimenting wi the various ways of tying up such cro as the chrysanthemum, considering th all the generally followed methods ha consumed a large amount of time whic might be employed to advantage in oth directions. As a result of their tria they have hit upon a plan which the say reduces the time required by at leas one-third. Their method, say with chrys anthemums or any similar plants, is t string one wire over each row of plants putting it high enough so that it will a all times be well up toward the top of the plants. On this wire they hang little hooks of their own invention, putting a hook above each plant. The hook is shaped like the letter S, except that the top loop is bent down so that it just slips over the wire easily, the lower loop being bent up until it is almost closed throughout its length, with a tight squeeze at the extreme end. Then a string or thread of any character is cut in pieces which will reach from the plants to the hook. A loop is tied about the plant and the free end is then passed over the hook attached to the wire. The lower loop, being so nearly closed, grasps the thread when it is pulled down into the loop and holds it firmly. As the grower passes along later and finds the plant again needs bringing up to the perpendicular, all he has to do is to slip the string out of the loop, draw it up until he has the plant where he wants it, and then draw the string down into the loop again, where it sticks firmly until lifted once more. Quite a number of growers who have visited the Volz establishment will try this device next season.

CONCRETE GREENHOUSE POSTS



Please let me know what proportions of soft coal ashes, sawdust and Atlas cement to use for posts for a greenhouse, so that I can drive nails in them. I bought posts for my greenhouses five or six years ago, but they are now no more, and I thought I would make some myself, as I wish to build another house, 28x100, in the spring. C. B. W.

The proportions for concrete posts soft enough to hold nails are: Ashes, three parts; sawdust, two and one-half parts; cement, one part. In order to make sure, it is safer to experiment by making a small block as a test and, if unsatisfactory, to add to or subtract from these proportions until the proper condition is attained. Ribes.

ILLINOIS STATE ASSOCIATION.

The advisory committee of the Illino State Florists' Association met at th University of Illinois, Champaign, D cember 27, to make arrangements f the state convention to be held there February. The members of the com mittee are: President, C. E. Gullett, Lincoln; vice-president, George Frank of Champaign; J. C. Vaughan, Chicag W. N. Rudd, Morgan Park; F. L. Wash burn, Bloomington; J. F. Ammann, Ed wardsville.

In addition to the regular progra there will be a banquet in Champaign and a trade's display, probably at th university. This exhibition is always a great attraction wherever the conven tion is held, and promises to be better than ever this year.

Establishment of Byron H. Ives, at Albuquerque, N. M.

AN ALBUQUERQUE RANGE.

Part of the greenhouse range of Byron Henry Ives, at Albuquerque, N. M., is here illustrated. The picture at once conveys the impression that the place is neat, orderly, compact and substantial, and the facts are such as to confirm the impression.

The store, work-room and boiler-room are new, and are built of brick, including the smokestack, which is fifty feet high. Two carnation houses, two rose houses, a show house and conservatory have also been added recently. A new boiler has been installed, and the heating system has been changed from hot water to steam. The entire range contains about 30,000 square feet of glass. The greenhouse walls are made of concrete, and there are concrete floors in the store, work-room, etc. Moninger material was used, with Garland gutters and truss construction. The bench legs are cement and the benches themselves are pecky cypress.

The water supply is also provided for in the same thorough way. There is a new 6-inch drilled well, with a two-step centrifugal pump, connected directly to a five horse-power, three-phase electric motor. The tank has a capacity of 2,000 gallons, is made of galvanized steel and stands on a 60-foot galvanized iron tower.

Ferns

DISEASED BOSTONS.

We are sending you another specimen of diseased Boston ferns, in addition to those which we sent you for examination a few weeks ago. These ferns are grown in a house covered with corrugated glass. It has been used as a fern house for years and has always produced the best of stock, under the care of the same grower. Hot water is used for heating, and the temperature is from 50 to 60 degrees. The ferns have not been frozen, but had commenced to act this way before cold weather set in. The water that is used for spraying is from a deep well and contains mineral substances. Other plants, however, are not affected, though sprayed with the same water. It is good drinking water and has no bad taste. These ferns have received two light dustings of tobacco dust. There are no gas mains or sewers connected with the house in any way. Any information will be thankfully received. C. S.

The second specimen received from C. S. shows similar injuries to those noted on the plant forwarded some weeks ago, and, as suggested at that time, these injuries are local in character and such as may be caused by dipping or spraying with some injurious liquid, or by some form of fumigation.

If the hot water pipes have not been painted and none of the woodwork of the house has been treated with any wood preservative, then I should be inclined to attribute the trouble to the spraying with water from a mineral spring, or rather to the fact that the water used was impregnated with some substance injurious to vegetation. I would suggest that sufficient rain water be collected to water the affected plants for a time, noting whether any improvement in growth is shown by this treatment. W. H. T.

BROWN SCALE ON FERNS.

Enclosed you will find a fern which is infested with lice. What would you advise me to do with the plants, as the pest seems to be killing them?

M. M. H.

The ferns in question are thoroughly infested with the common brown scale, and if allowed to continue in such a condition they will have a hard job to make any headway.

The best plan would be to cut off and burn the worst fronds and then to dip the plants in a solution of Rose Leaf Extract of tobacco, used in the proportion of one part of the extract to fifty parts of water, and to repeat the dip in a week or ten days. This solution may injure the tender tips of the fern fronds to some extent, but the injury would be much less than that done by the insects.

W. H. T.

RED SPIDER ON ARAUCARIAS.

Enclosed you will find a cutting of one of our araucarias. Something seems to be the matter. Can you tell us what it is and a preventive? We are using Bordeaux and kerosene emulsion, thinking the trouble may be rust or brown scale. M. & J.

The araucaria in question is being rapidly spoiled by an attack of red spider. An outbreak of this kind on araucarias is usually brought about by keeping the plants too dry and too warm. These pines grow best in a moist atmosphere, and a night temperature of 50 degrees at this season of the year is high enough for them. Thorough syringing with a good pressure of clear water is the best remedy, and this should be persisted in on every bright day.

TROUBLES OF THE BOSS.

A REVIEW friend has sent the following:

Consider the troubles of the Boss. Don't envy him—pity him. He pays his bills—when he can. He pays your bills every Saturday. Your days are —— hours of work. His days are twenty-four hours of worry. He takes a good deal of cursing that by rights belongs to you. Don't imagine that there's nothing doing in his head because he looks so calm and unruffled; he works while you sleep.

Just remember these things when you envy him, when you long for his days of ease, and comfort, and luxury; when you wish you had his job.

If you had his job—you wouldn't have it. You would have a nightmare all day and all night, and when you saw the payroll Saturday night you would long for a lodge in some vast wilderness.

No! Don't try to work him—work for him. When you work for him you are working for yourself.

Pull off the blinders—keep to the right and forge ahead.

YOUR paper certainly sells the stuff.—G. E. FINK. Roselle, N. J.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS

Hybrid Perpetual Roses.

Hybrid perpetual rose plants which were potted in late fall and which are still standing outdoors, but with the pots well protected, should now be housed and started in a temperature of 40 degrees at night if they are wanted for Easter. It is not necessary to prune them at once. A wait of a few days will show more distinctly where the dormant eyes are. It is better to prune down pretty closely; snipping off the tops results in an early crop of short-stemmed flowers. Hard pruning causes the plants to break strongly. The demand for this class of roses is not what it was nor what it should be. The rambler types have, unfortunately, filled the stage so completely that little thought has been given to the many beautiful hybrid perpetuals.

Spray the plants occasionally until they break, then let them have 5 degrees more heat. They do not require or relish hard forcing at any time and it is better to flower them in a night temperature of 50 degrees rather than a higher one, as the flowers then have more substance and are of much better color.

Cyclamens.

Christmas trade will probably have disposed of a large proportion of the cyclamens. There is always a fair call for them later in the season, and any plants left unsold should be given a bench in a rather cool house; 45 degrees at night is quite warm enough. Grown thus, they will be much stockier than when kept warmer. The young plants for flowering next winter must never be neglected. They should now be establishing themselves in small pots. Or, if they are grown in flats, which is an excellent way to grow them in the early stages, they should be transferred to 3-inch pots before they become too crowded. Scratch over the surface soil from time to time and keep them warmer than suggested for the older plants; 52 to 55 degrees at night will suit them nicely.

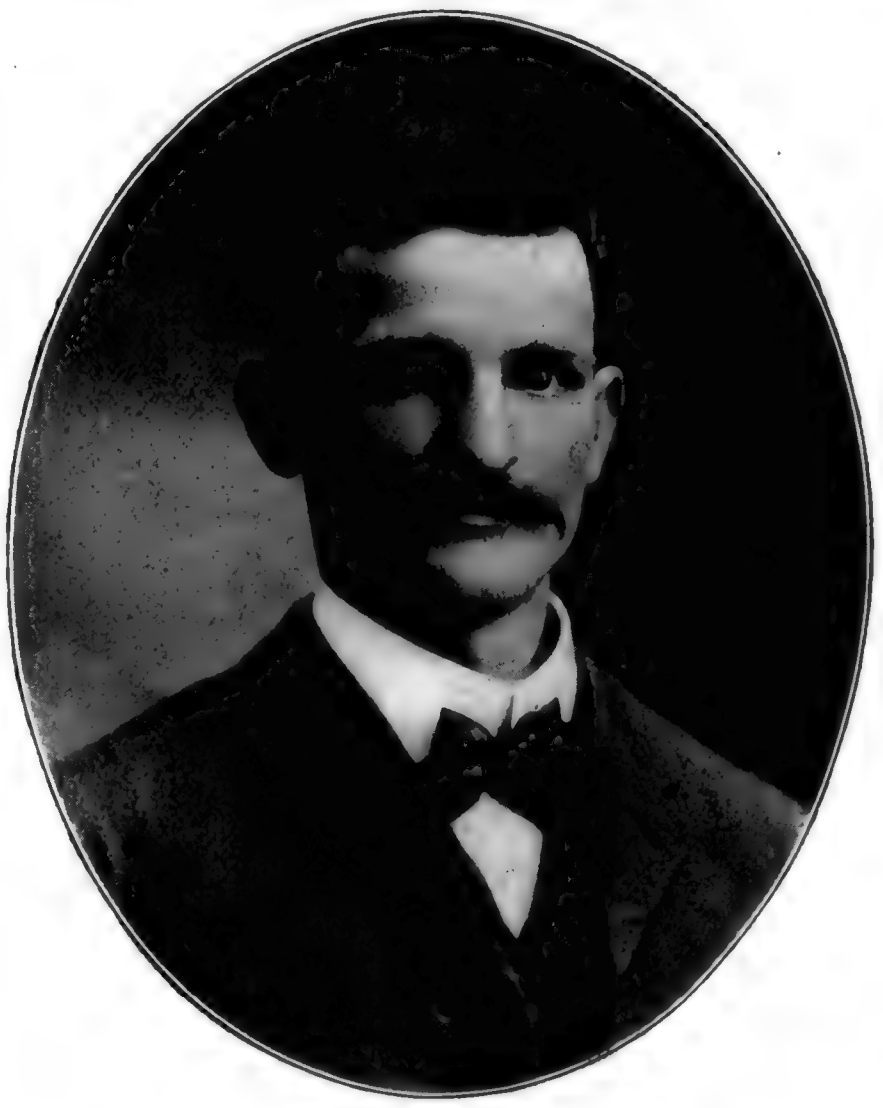
Astilbes.

The astilbes, or spiræas as they are still usually called, which came to hand a few weeks ago, should now be potted. It is a little early to start plants for Easter flowering, but the clumps will speedily push numerous roots into the pots, and we have always found that these early potted clumps gave the best results. Stand the pots under a stage in a cool greenhouse if you are short of space in shed and cellar for them. As a rule, eight weeks in an average night temperature of 60 degrees will flower these spiræas, all but Queen Alexandra. This latter kind must be started right away if desired at Easter.

Tulips.

While a few La Reine and Duc van Thol tulips appeared for Christmas, 1909, the stems were short, as usual. After Christmas such varieties as La Reine, Cottage Maid, Keizerskroon, Vermilion Brilliant and Proserpine may be started with every prospect of success. Let them have a warm house—70 degrees at night and 85 degrees during the middle of the day. Keep the pans or flats well darkened until the shoots of hyacinths, tulips and narcissi are several inches long, then inure to stronger light. Unlike lily of the valley, tulips are far better without bottom heat. The soil must be kept moist. When the growth of the bulbs is well started, apply liquid cow manure once a week. The tulips are much more likely to be short-stemmed, if not started warm and dark, than the narcissi. The latter can be placed below or along the sides of benches, where they will come along nicely.

Marguerites.



Old marguerite plants, which were carried over summer in pots, will now be blooming freely, and at this time, when flowers are at their scarcest, they prove acceptable. Let the pots stand over a bench from which some crop, such as mums, has been cut. They will speedily root through and show increased vigor. If planted directly into the bench, they are liable to make too much growth at the expense of flowers. Keep plants intended for Easter flowering potted and spread out. Discontinue pinching after this time, or you will make them too late. Marguerites are gross feeders and can hardly be overwatered. Liquid and chemical food, alternated, once a week will keep them vigorous.

Dahlias.

If there will be any bed or bench which has sufficient head-room and you care to try the experiment of growing dahlias for spring flowering, you should now start some of the tubers in a temperature of 60 to 65 degrees. Dampen them but little, or they are liable to decay. When started into growth divide the stools, leaving one strong shoot to a plant. These can be planted in rows twenty-four inches apart, allowing eighteen inches between the plants. An average night temperature of 50 degrees is about right. The cactus, decorative and single dahlias are better for forcing than the shows, fancies and pompons. The former types also sell better as cut flowers.

Azaleas.

Any left-over azaleas from Christmas should be taken care of. Pick off the flowers and any seed pods which may have formed. Let the plants grow in a moderately warm house for a few weeks. They can be planted outdoors about the last of May and will give you a far heavier crop of flowers than any of the newly imported stock, if kept well syringed during the warm months. Plants for Easter flowering can be kept cool for some time yet. See that none are allowed to become dry at the root. There is some demand for azaleas right through the winter and it will pay to start a few plants from time to time to satisfy any local demand.

Sweet-scented Verbenas.

The demand for sweet-scented verbenas is always good. Probably you lifted and stored a few old roots and these are probably in a semi-dormant condition. If placed in a warm, moist house, syringed freely and not kept too moist at the root, a fine crop of young shoots will soon appear. Rub these off with a heel and place them in a warm propagating bench. Few will fail to root and they will make nice, bushy plants for spring sales.

While speaking of propagating, the present time, when the days are short and the heating pipes constantly warm, is an excellent one for putting in batches of coleus, heliotropes, crotons, dracænas and any other ornamental leaved plants. While the sand is constantly warm and kept well moistened the chances of losses are small.

Gloxinias.

A batch of gloxinias can easily be had in flower for Memorial day, at which time the blooms prove extremely serviceable for bouquet work. Start some of the dormant tubers about January 1. You will note that many of them are already starting to grow. Do not pot at once, but place in flats of sand and leaf-mold. Water with moderation, or you will rot every tuber. A temperature of 60 to 65 degrees, with a moist atmosphere, is suitable for starting the gloxinias. As soon as the growth has fairly started and before the roots have time to become matted, pot off the tubers, using 6-inch pots for the strongest and 5-inch pots for smaller ones. For compost a mixture of two-thirds loam and one-sixth each of decayed cow manure, well broken up, and leaf-mold, with some sand and fine charcoal added, will be found suitable. A light, moderately rich and rather porous soil grows the best gloxinias.

Lorraine Begonias.

Christmas will have pretty well cleaned out the Lorraines. Do not forget to save a sufficient number of healthy stock plants for another year. These can be placed in a temperature of 50 degrees and kept somewhat drier at the root. If desired, a batch of leaf cuttings can be placed in the cutting bench right away, but there is ample time for this.

Rex Begonias.

If the stock of Rex begonias is rather low, now is one of the best times of the year to propagate them. They are easily increased by simply cutting up the old leaves in pieces, using the thicker portions of the leaves and discarding the thinnest portion near the edges. Pieces of leaf an inch square, inserted upright or laid flat and sprinkled with sand, will root easily. Even a propagating bed is not necessary for raising a fresh stock of Rex begonias. Flats of fine moss and sand, on which leaf divisions are laid, if placed under the bench of a warm house will give an abundance of young plants in a few weeks.

The New Officers.

The new officers elected at the last meeting of the Milwaukee Florists' Club are all enthusiastic members of the club and full of energy to promote anything for the welfare of the club or the trade in general.

Nic Zweifel, the newly elected president, is a carnation specialist, and grows carnations exclusively for the wholesale market. To use the up-to-date expression, we must say that he is "some" grower, and the quality of his stock will verify this at almost all seasons of the year. He has some 60,000 to 70,000 feet of glass, at North Milwaukee, and carnations can be seen at their best at this establishment. He is a shrewd and keen observer of the present day needs and the varieties he grows always find a steady market. Some new varieties originated at his place, among them the new Bright Spot, which attracted considerable attention at the shows this fall. Mr. Zweifel is a member of the Carnation Society, also a life member of the S. A. F., and he can always be found at any important gathering of the trade. The club has elected a good president and one who will make good.

Alexander Klokner, vice-president, is one of the old-time club members, but still quite young and exceedingly active. Mr. Klokner has been identified with every branch of the florists' business since settling in Milwaukee, and has been most successful in all his undertakings. At the present time his attention is divided between his greenhouses and landscape gardening. He has been unusually successful in the latter work and many fine estates have been laid out by him. He has served the city as superintendent of the public parks and did excellent work. Mr. Klokner has a liking for growing novelties at his greenhouses and continually sends in stock to the wholesale market out of the ordinary run. He is well versed in all floricultural matters and the saying here is, "If you see something and don't know what it it, ask Klokner." He will make a good vice-president.

Our treasurer, John G. Heitman, is a fine fellow. He is the senior partner of the firm of Heitman & Baerman, also successful carnation growers. He is a good custodian of the club funds and always on the lookout for the walfare of the club's finances. No check or voucher is drawn on the club and signed John G. Heitman, treasurer, unless it is for the best interest of the club.

Our secretary, Eugene Oestreicher, is a young man bubbling over with club enthusiasm. He is a carnation grower employed by Nic Zweifel and called his "right hand man." His loyalty and duties to the club are proven by his steady attendance at all the meetings. He is always on deck in all kinds of weather, and he has a long ways to come, too. He is a great favorite among the ladies also and a busy man at any of the club's entertainments. He is also the local scribe for the REVIEW, and keeps its readers well posted on local and market affairs here. The important office of secretary is in excellent hands.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS

Hybrid Perpetual Roses.

Hybrid perpetual rose plants which were potted in late fall and which are still standing outdoors, but with the pots well protected, should now be housed and started in a temperature of 40 degrees at night if they are wanted for Easter. It is not necessary to prune them at once. A wait of a few days will show more distinctly where the dormant eyes are. It is better to prune down pretty closely; snipping off the tops results in an early crop of short-stemmed flowers. Hard pruning causes the plants to break strongly. The demand for this class of roses is not what it was nor what it should be. The rambler types have, unfortunately, filled the stage so completely that little thought has been given to the many beautiful hybrid perpetuals.

Spray the plants occasionally until they break, then let them have 5 degrees more heat. They do not require or relish hard forcing at any time and it is better to flower them in a night temperature of 50 degrees rather than a higher one, as the flowers then have more substance and are of much better color.

Cyclamens.

Christmas trade will probably have disposed of a large proportion of the cyclamens. There is always a fair call for them later in the season, and any plants left unsold should be given a bench in a rather cool house; 45 degrees at night is quite warm enough. Grown thus, they will be much stockier than when kept warmer. The young plants for flowering next winter must never be neglected. They should now be establishing themselves in small pots. Or, if they are grown in flats, which is an excellent way to grow them in the early stages, they should be transferred to 3-inch pots before they become too crowded. Scratch over the surface soil from time to time and keep them warmer than suggested for the older plants; 52 to 55 degrees at night will suit them nicely.

Astilbes.

The astilbes, or spiræas as they are still usually called, which came to hand a few weeks ago, should now be potted. It is a little early to start plants for Easter flowering, but the clumps will speedily push numerous roots into the pots, and we have always found that these early potted clumps gave the best results. Stand the pots under a stage in a cool greenhouse if you are short of space in shed and cellar for them. As a rule, eight weeks in an average night temperature of 60 degrees will flower these spiræas, all but Queen Alexandra. This latter kind must be started right away if desired at Easter.

Tulips.

While a few La Reine and Due van Thol tulips appeared for Christmas, 1909, the stems were short, as usual. After Christmas such varieties as La Reine, Cottage Maid, Keizerskroon, Vermilion Brilliant and Proserpine may be started with every prospect of success. Let them have a warm house—70 degrees at night and 85 degrees during the middle of the day. Keep the pans or flats well darkened until the shoots of hyacinths, tulips and narcissi are several inches long, then inure to stronger light. Unlike lily of the valley, tulips are far better without bottom heat. The soil must be kept moist. When the growth of the bulbs is well started, apply liquid cow manure once a week. The tulips are much more likely to be short-stemmed, if not started warm and dark, than the narcissi. The latter can be placed below or along the sides of benches, where they will come along nicely.

Marguerites.

Old marguerite plants, which were carried over summer in pots, will now be blooming freely, and at this time, when flowers are at their scarcest, they prove acceptable. Let the pots stand over a bench from which some crop, such as mums, has been cut. They will speedily root through and show increased vigor. If planted directly into the bench, they are liable to make too much growth at the expense of flowers. Keep plants intended for Easter flowering potted and spread out. Discontinue pinching after this time, or you will make them too late. Marguerites are gross feeders and can hardly be overwatered. Liquid and chemical food, alternated, once a week will keep them vigorous.

Dahlias.

If there will be any bed or bench which has sufficient head-room and you care to try the experiment of growing dahlias for spring flowering, you should now start some of the tubers in a temperature of 60 to 65 degrees. Damp them but little, or they are liable to decay. When started into growth divide the stools, leaving one strong shoot to plant. These can be planted in rows twenty-four inches apart, allowing eighteen inches between the plants. An average night temperature of 50 degrees is about right. The cactus, decorative and single dahlias are better for forcing than the shows, fancies and pompons. The former types also sell better as cut flowers.

Azaleas.

Any left-over azaleas from Christmas should be taken care of. Pick off the flowers and any seed pods which may have formed. Let the plants grow in a moderately warm house for a few weeks. They can be planted outdoors about the last of May and will give you a far heavier crop of flowers than any of the newly imported stock, if kept well syringed during the warm months. Plants for Easter flowering can be kept cool for some time yet. See that none are allowed to become dry at the root. There is some demand for azaleas right through the winter and it will pay to start a few plants from time to time to satisfy any local demand.

Eugene Oestreicher, Secretary.

Alex. Klokner, Vice-president.

Three of the New Officers of the Milwaukee Florists' Club.

Sweet-scented Verbenas.

The demand for sweet-scented verbenas is always good. Probably you lifted and stored a few old roots and these are probably in a semi-dormant condition. If placed in a warm, moist house, syringed freely and not kept too moist at the root, a fine crop of young shoots will soon appear. Rub these off with a heel and place them in a warm propagating bench. Few will fail to root and they will make nice, bushy plants for spring sales.

While speaking of propagating, the present time, when the days are short and the heating pipes constantly warm, is an excellent one for putting in batches of coleus, heliotropes, crotons, dracænas and any other ornamental leaved plants. While the sand is constantly warm and kept well moistened the chances of losses are small.

Gloxinias.

A batch of gloxinias can easily be had in flower for Memorial day, at which time the blooms prove extremely serviceable for bouquet work. Start some of the dormant tubers about January 1. You will note that many of them are already starting to grow. Do not pot at once, but place in flats of sand and leaf-mold. Water with moderation, or you will rot every tuber. A temperature of 60 to 65 degrees, with a moist atmosphere, is suitable for starting the gloxinias. As soon as the growth has fairly started and before the roots have time to become matted pot off the tubers, using 6-inch pots for the strongest and 5-inch pots for the other ones. For compost a mixture of two-thirds loam and one-sixth each of well-rotted cow manure, well broken up, and leaf-mold, with some sand and fine charcoal added, will be found suitable. A rather moderately rich and rather porous soil grows the best gloxinias.

Lorraine Begonias.

Christmas will have pretty well cleaned out the Lorraines. Do not forget to save a sufficient number of healthy stock plants for another year. These can be placed in a temperature of 50 degrees and kept somewhat drier at the root. If desired, a batch of leaf cuttings can be placed in the cutting bench right away, but there is ample time for this.

Rex Begonias.

If the stock of Rex begonias is rather low, now is one of the best times of the year to propagate them. They are easily increased by simply cutting up the old leaves in pieces, using the thicker portions of the leaves and discarding the thinnest portion near the edges. Pieces of leaf an inch square, inserted upright or laid flat and sprinkled with sand, will root easily. Even a propagating bed is not necessary for raising a fresh stock of Rex begonias. Flats of fine moss and sand, on which leaf divisions are laid, if placed under the bench of a warm house will give an abundance of young plants in a few weeks.

HERE'S HOMELIKE HOUSING.

Time after time the business ends of florists' establishments are illustrated, so just for variety here are a couple of pictures that show what all the glass and the pother about growing and selling are for. Of course these are only the nests—the birds are inside. It isn't wholly for the love of flowers that most florists labor; it's for love of home. There must be something wrong in the make-up of the man who doesn't cherish his home above all things save its occupants—many a man has sacrificed honor for home—and want to spend as much time there as he can. The better the home, the more cheerful its surroundings, the brighter life will be. Homes and flowers go together. Every florist ought to run his greenhouses as a means to an end—the homelike, comfortable, bright and happy home—and not make the home simply a place to go to after all the other places have shut up.

BOSTON.

The Market.

It would hardly have been possible to manufacture any better weather than we were favored with during Christmas week. Skies were practically cloudless and, while the temperature was moderately low, necessitating careful wrapping up of all plants, everyone could do his trading in comfort, there being no snow, slush or mire to contend with. On the contrary, dust was flying on roads in both city and country.

It is not surprising, considering the favorable climatic conditions, that Christmas trade was good. It is something of a hackneyed phrase to say that all records were broken, but the volume of trade was undoubtedly heavier than ever before, and while higher prices have been realized on some flowers in preceding years, the average prices were good.

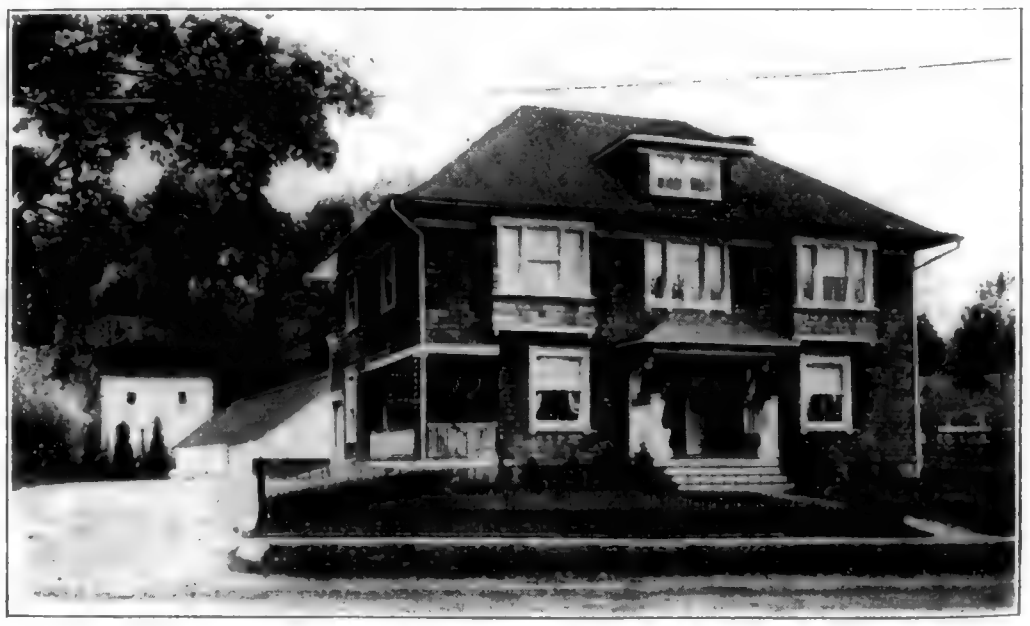
Every year the plant trade cuts more and more of a figure at Christmas. Nothing new was seen, but the old favorites sold well. Azaleas were, as usual, the leaders, Apollo, Firefly, Mme. Petrick and Deutsche Perle being mostly in evidence. Large quantities of Lorraine begonias were sold, and these were never of finer quality. Some purchasers fight shy of them, claiming that they drop too soon when placed in a warm room. Cyclamens were seen in quantity, but did not sell as well as could be wished. Primulas had quite a good sale. Poinsettias in pans were in big demand. Erica melanthera, ardisias, Otaheite oranges, hollies, Skimmia Japonica, berried solanums, Christmas peppers, bougainvilleas, Cypripedium insigne and valley in pans were among the other plants sold. There was also considerable call for pans of made-up foliage plants, fern dishes, Boston ferns and palms of medium size.

There was a good supply of roses of all kinds, but they sold out well. Beauties made $12 per dozen for the best, other grades making all the way from $2 to $9 per dozen. There were some remarkably fine Richmond, the finest making $6 per dozen; others went at $2 to $4 per dozen. Killarney was also fine, selling from $1 to $4 per dozen. Bride and Bridesmaid, as usual, hung fire and did not move so well as the Killarneys. Some nice My Maryland, Chatenay, Safrano and other varieties were seen, but only in moderate sized lots.

Carnations were quite plentiful, but cleared out well. The top price for fancies was $10 to $12 per hundred on such varieties as Bay State, Beacon, Victory, Octoroon, Ruby and Fenn. Such varieties as Pink Delight, Enchantress, May Day, Winsor, Rose-pink Enchantress and Winona brought $6 to $8, while whites varied from $3 to $6, the lower prices being for Queen. Violets were forthcoming in immense quantities; the prevailing rates were $1 to $1.50 per hundred, singles taking the best prices, as usual. Sweet peas made $1 to $2 per hundred; valley, $3 to $5; lilies and callas, $12 per hundred. Roman hyacinths, Paper White narcissi and stevia were plentiful at ordinary prices. There were small lots of yellow narcissi, tulips and freesias, the finest of the last named making $6 to $8 per hundred. Mignonette made $2 to $3 and pansies $1 to $1.50 per hundred. Some nice Euphorbia jacquiniæflora and scarlet bouvardia sold well. Poinsettias had a good call at from $2 to $6 per dozen bracts. Chrysanthemums made their final bow, some nice flowers selling at $3 to $5 per dozen. Gardenias sold at $4 to $5 per dozen. Cattleyas were in strong request. Percivaliana made $4 to $5 and Trianæ $6 to $9 per dozen. Cypripedium insigne was in good supply at $8 to $10 per hundred. There was an excellent sale for adiantum and asparagus, without much change in prices.

Tne business in greens of all kinds was tremendous, far surpassing previous years' records. Holly sold splendidly, as did mistletoe, while the call for boxwood and laurel wreathing was never greater.

Taking everything into consideration, Christmas trade was the largest in volume and best all around ever recorded in Boston, although prices did not average quite so high as in some previous years. The retailers were greatly favored by the clear weather and did a first-class business. The cold weather necessitated heavy wrapping, but it was fortunate that the heavy snow storm, which struck us Christmas night, came after business was completed.



December 27 saw a moderate supply of flowers in the market. Many arrivals were late, owing to snow blockades. Demand was not heavy, but prices held up well all around. With a continuation of the present weather there will be a sharp curtailment in production, and prices will probably rule high for at least a few days.

Various Notes.

Mann Bros. had a lot of remarkably fine bulbous flowers in for the Christmas trade, including both tulips and yellow narcissi. They also had a heavy pot plant trade.

The calanthes shown at the last meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club by Duncan Finlayson were remarkably fine. In addition to C. Veitchii there were Sandhurstiana, Cornelius Vanderbilt, vestita rubro-oculata, albo-oculata and luteo-oculata. Mr. Finlayson grows four bulbs in an 8-inch pan, uses dry cow manure freely and feeds heavily.

Florists' Review,
334 Dearborn St.,
Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen:-

Relative to the results we are receiving from our advertisement in the Review, it gives us pleasure to state these have been most satisfactory. The advertisement had its first insertion December 9, and over 200 inquiries, for literature, etc., on our Thermostatic Instruments for Greenhouses, have already come to us, from Florists located in 31 states in the Union.

The result was, indeed, an agreeable surprise to us, as we would have been satisfied with receiving half this number of inquiries.

Yours very truly,

NATIONAL CLOCK & ELECTRIC MFG. CO.

J. G. Beckmann

Prest. & Gen'l Manager.

Killarney, White Killarney, Richmond and other roses for the holidays, also some of the old favorites, like Safrano and Isabella Sprunt.

Henry M. Robinson & Co. had for their fourth Christmas at 15 Province street the heaviest trade on record, not only in cut flowers but holly, laurel wreathing and other greenery.

J. Newman & Sons had attractive Christmas windows. Their azaleas were specially fine, also poinsettias, while in cut flowers they showed practically everything in season.

There is already considerable talk of the carnation convention at Pittsburg, and prospects are excellent for a good Boston delegation. The annual banquet of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club, January 27, is always attended by the leading local carnationists, and their absence next month at Pittsburg will be regretted.

William Sim had, as usual, the biggest lot of single violets of any local grower, and probably his pick was double that of any other single violet grower in the country. In addition to Princess of Wales, he had fine Boston, Kaiser Wilhelm and Baron N. E. Rothschild.

The exhibition of 700 splendid photographs of plants, animals and scenery in western and northern China by the Arnold Arboretum is attracting many visitors to Horticultural hall. The photographs are the work of E. H. Wilson, the noted and intrepid plant collector, who will also deliver a stereopticon lecture before the Gardeners' and Florists' Club, January 18.

Welch Bros. had the heaviest Christmas trade on record. Their shipments of roses, including superb Beauties, carnations and other flowers, were immense. They also had a fine pot plant trade, while in holly, wreathing and other greenery their output was far ahead of all previous years.

J. T. Butterworth struck the market right with a fine lot of Cypripedium insigne and Cattleya Trianæ. He has one or two good pure whites among the latter.

Sidney Hoffman's big show windows on Massachusetts avenue never looked better than for Christmas. Grandly berried hollies in tubs, ardisias in quantity, splendid azaleas and specimen colored dracænas were noteworthy.

The snow storm, which reached here Christmas night and raged all the following day, was the most severe experienced for some years. Aside from the disorganization of traffic, the results were quite serious on trees and shrubs, many of which were badly broken or entirely ruined by the weight of heavy, set snow. Outside of broken glass, we have not heard of any serious damage to local growers.

The annual meeting of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society occurs January 1, when the annual address of the president and reports of the chairmen of the several committees will be held.

A. Roper had an extra fine lot of Bay State carnations for Christmas. These realized top prices, as did flowers of his new scarlet seedling, William Penn.

Annual convention, Rochester, N. Y., August 16 to 19, 1910.

Results bring advertising.
The Review brings results.

The U. S. Department of Agriculture has issued a second revise of its bulletin on the use of hydrocyanic acid gas for fumigating greenhouses.

The Chambre Syndicale des Horticulteurs Belges has been in existence since 1880, has a body of 500 trade members, and has been of immense benefit to the trade generally.

Not a few subscribers save themselves the bother of annual renewal by sending the Review $2, $3, or sometimes $5, instead of the dollar-bill that insures fifty-two visits of the paper.

TAX ON GROWING STOCK.

The Massachusetts state tax commissioner, William D. T. Trefry, has given an opinion that the growing stock of florists is a proper subject of taxation, which hits the trade in almost every city and town of size throughout the commonwealth, as there are few instances where assessments have been levied upon the growing plants by city and town assessors.

Commissioner Trefry's supervisors have been visiting many places and held conferences with local boards over the subject, as a result of which a concerted movement is about to be inaugurated throughout the state by which florists are to be assessed upon their growing stock, the same as manufacturing concerns and shopkeepers. The local assessors say they have the support of the state tax commissioner in the movement they are about to take and can see no reason why the florists should not be assessed in accordance with the value of the stock carried.

A test case will be instituted by the trade if the threatened assessments are made, as reported in the Review of December 23.

OBITUARY.

James T. McKevitt.

James T. McKevitt, of Bristol, R. I., who for several years has been a considerable raiser of greenhouse vegetables and some flowers, exclusively for the Fall River, Mass., markets, was the victim of a most peculiar accident recently. He was having a playful struggle with his daughter for the possession of an umbrella. In the mock battle the point of the umbrella penetrated one of his eyes and hemorrhage of the brain followed, causing death. The accident occurred at his home in Bristol, and he was removed to the Rhode Island hospital, in Providence, where he died. He was 54 years of age and had been in business in the suburbs of Fall River for a number of years, but sold out his holdings about six years ago on account of ill health and removed to Bristol. About a year ago he reëntered the business and was beginning to develop his old line of trade.

George Serviss.

Death came to George H. Serviss, at Batavia, Ill., December 23, following an illness of many months, at his home at 75 Harrison street. The deceased had lived in Batavia for twenty-five years, and had conducted a greenhouse establishment for a long period of time. He leaves a widow and two children.

THE PRICE OF GLASS.

The price of window glass was advanced three times in the last half of December and it is regarded as certain that the Imperial Window Glass Co., now almost ready to do business, will be the means of putting the market considerably higher. Most wholesale dealers in greenhouse glass have withdrawn all previous quotations and are making prices only for immediate acceptance, waiting for the market to find itself.

It seems certain that the price of greenhouse glass will be higher next spring than it now is—much higher, some of the jobbers say—but whether or not any combination of the manufacturers will permanently solve their business troubles remains to be seen. Production has been greater than demand for the last couple of years, and prices so low there was no profit, but it hardly seems possible that so simple an expedient as the one now influencing the market can permanently overrule so fundamental a law as that of supply and demand.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The Christmas business this year would have been much the best ever recorded had December 24 and Christmas morning given the results anticipated. The supply proved to be considerably larger than anyone expected; indeed, it was the largest supply this market ever has seen at Christmas. Early in the week receipts were light, many orders were shipped short, and many others were refused, calling for Beauties and other special items. But when the big shipping days arrived, December 22 and December 23, it is probable that every house in this market filled its orders more nearly as given than they ever before were filled at this holiday. When the business leaps to four or five times the normal volume, it never is possible to fill every order just as wanted. The wholesalers must keep things moving; they cannot let orders lie until they get in the stock to fill out some one item; sorting, packing and shipping must go on continuously from morning until late at night. Thus it happens that an order may go out short a part of one item, when a half hour later that wholesaler may have plenty. This Christmas, however, the supply was so large throughout the two shipping days that pretty nearly everyone got what he wanted, and all he wanted.

The shipping business never was better but when the wholesalers got through Thursday evening a good many of them found they still had quite a quantity of stock on hand, some of them great quantities, and Thursday evening the market began to weaken. The day before Christmas brought the storm and the business done that day fell far below expectations. Christmas morning there was extremely little doing. The result is that

Killarney

Our Killarneys are easily the finest roses this market ever offered for January—when roses usually are scarce and in first-class demand. Our cut is large. The color is perfect. All lengths of stem, but mostly select and special, with a fair proportion of extra special, stock that is above criticism. Let us know the length you need. You can do big business with this stock.

Beauties

Our Beauties are in steady crop; splendid color, fine foliage, strong stems, all lengths; especially strong on medium leng If your trade knows good Beauties, you should use ours.

Carnations

Our midwinter Carnation crop is on. The quality is right up to the standard that has made our supply so widely known among the buyers—we always have the most uniformly high grade large lot of Carnations on the Chicago market.

Violets

Our Violets are better than they ever were before and we have for years handled the cream of the Hudson River doubles and the finest home-grown singles. You can build a big business on Violets if you get your stock from us.

Miscellaneous Stock

Sweet peas are more abundant, pink and white with good stem, and a few fancy colors. Trumpet narcissi and all fancy flowers. Order smilax and asparagus in bunches. All outdoor greens of best quality.

the wholesale houses make reports that vary widely. Those who got the bulk of their stock in early, shipped it out at good prices, but the stock that came in Friday did not realize what the growers expected for it; indeed, Friday night many wholesale houses closed with large quantities of stock on hand, stock which should have realized good money, but for which there was practically no possibility of sale until the opening of this week, when the stock was scarcely in salable condition. Not only was local trade Friday far less than had been expected, but cancellations on late shipping orders were numerous, especially from the west, where the storm was a day earlier than in Chicago. The poor business Friday cut a big hole in the receipts of many of the wholesale houses. Some of them did much the largest business they ever have done, but it was on the shipping days that they made their gains.

There was no marked shortage in anything, but Beauties were less abundant than any other flower. It was possible for wholesalers to buy Beauties all through the week and on Friday the price weakened a trifle, along with the price of other stock. Killarney was by far the best selling rose, but the supply was something enormous. Quality generally was excellent. Richmond was, of course, in heavy demand, and there was a shortage in the medium grades. Mrs. Jardine was in moderate supply and sold extremely well. My Maryland was not offered in much quantity, and did not sell nearly so well as Killarney. It was noticeable that the proportion of the extra special lengths of roses was greater than at Christmas in previous years, while the proportion of short roses was smaller. The demand was largely for the medium lengths and the extra long stock did not realize its full value, compared to other lengths. Some wholesalers even had the extra long Richmond left, stock they expected to get from 35 cents to 50 cents for, and which they were unwilling to sell for less. There was some surplus of the extra long grade of Killarney, stock that 35 cents to 40 cents was asked for. When this grade was found to be hanging fire the price, of course, was shaded, and Friday the city buyers were offered such inducements that some of them canceled orders previously placed with other houses, making considerable confusion. It was a surprise to see how well white roses sold. No one expected any demand for these, but several wholesalers found themselves with more fancy long Killarney than they wanted, while they were unable to fill their orders for White Killarney and Bride.

Carnations moved well up to December 24. The receipts that day were extremely heavy, for it appears to be a habit of carnation growers to send in the last moment the heaviest shipments of the week. Indeed, right up to the last incoming train Friday night the carnations were arriving by many thousands. It was the old story. Prices went down and much stock was left unsold. The white, of course, suffered especially, and there was considerable waste among the late consignments. The cheap buyers, who are looked to to clean up the splits and sleepy carnations, were put out of business by the cold and snow and their absence was keenly felt; it made hundreds of dollars' difference to each house.

Violets sold well. Probably not as many as usual reached this market, but the quality was better than it ordinarily is at Christmas. The price ranged from $1.25 to $2, with most of the stock selling between $1.50 and $1.75. While considerable quantities were sold at $2, the houses which clung too tenaciously to this price had plenty of stock to offer cheap early this week.

Cattleyas were the shortest item on the market; all the first-class stores wanted them, and none could get all that were wanted. Poinsettias sold slowly, as they have for several years. One of the things necessary to make a thoroughly successful Christmas is a balance between supply and demand, which gives a good market for the odds and ends. This year the odds and ends did not have that market; the absence of the cheap-sales people was felt here. Such items as Paper Whites, jonquils, sweet peas and greens sold slowly. It was a surprise that there was so little demand for greens.

Since Christmas things have been even more quiet than usual. There was next to nothing stirring Christmas day, because there was a foot of snow on the sidewalks that morning, and Monday most of the retailers had enough flowers left over to meet all the needs of that day. Shipping trade also was light. Demand is slowly gathering volume, but there is a large supply of stock in the market, much more than in other years, and prices have fallen sharply. Years ago Christmas prices held until after New Year's; this year they are pretty nearly cut in two, though the market looks for a rally as New Year's day approaches. White roses are notably scarce and have held up better than anything else.

The wholesalers are busy adjusting complaints. The storm delayed many shipments, but, worst of all, it caused stock to be left over on the hands of out-of town buyers, as well as city customers, and this always is a prolific source of kicks. If the buyer sells out clean, he is happy, but if he gets stuck, he is apt to be looking for trouble and, of course, is able to find it.

better than last year, while a substantial portion of the retail interest reports a more or less falling off in business. In the better grade of stores it is said the sale of plants and pottery was better than ever, mostly small arrangements: fancy dishes with small plants in them. The basket seems to have had its day. Though many were sold, a larger proportion of the plants than ever were in pottery or china. The cut flower business was not pushed, possibly because the retailers had bought their plants and would have them to pay for, so it was up to them to sell them before they sold cut flowers not yet bought. It was specially noticeable that the stores in the workingmen's sections of the city reported a falling off in their sales. The explanation was that the cost of living is now so high the business of these stores is largely limited to funeral work. Previously these stores have cleaned up, at good prices, large quantities of stock that fell just short of meeting the needs of the critical trade. The street stand branch of retaildom was absolutely out of business because of the storm, and all who depend on transient trade suffered severely.

The retailers bought sparingly of cut flowers, but most of them had some left, and in several stores the plants still on hand indicate that the overbuying will cut quite a hole into the Christmas profits. Violets proved to be overbought in many of the best stores. The explanation for this is that the storm of December 24 and 25 cut down the sales on this flower rather more than on any other. The storm cut a big hole in all retail sales.

W. J. Smyth says that his explanation for the failure of the Christmas business to reach anticipations is about like this: "Flush times are not so good as hard times for the florists' Christmas. In the hard-times year the people who had been buying expensive presents sent flowers instead; this year they had the price to go back to the diamond stores, and the florist lost their patronage. Also, the public knows cut flowers cost twice as much at Christmas as a week before and a week after, so they naturally don't buy them any too freely when prices are at the peak."

In some of the retail stores gold basket arrangements of artificial poinsettias and perpetuated fern fronds were shown and proved good sellers. One store reports selling about a dozen of these baskets at from $10 to $15 each.

George Walther Weds.

There are men who go about all their affairs preceded by a brass band, but George Walther is not one of these. He wears rubber heels. It has just developed that December 16 Miss Marguerite Hills, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. R. Hills, formerly of Maywood, arrived from California, and that Miss Hills and Mr. Walther were married that evening at the Walther home on the south side. The bride is almost as well known among florists as is Mr. Walther himself, and it really is not fair to their friends to keep so quiet about the wedding.

Various Notes.

E. E. Pieser, of Kennicott Bros. Co., was born New Year's day, 1863. There will be the usual celebration at the Pieser home this week.

The A. L. Randall Co. handled a considerable quantity of orchids for Christmas.

E. C. Amling's store was open continuously from Friday morning until noon on Saturday, and it is said that tickets amounting to over $1,000 were written between 3 a. m. and 4 a. m. Mr. Amling has been confined to his home for several days as a result of the Christmas experience.

August Poehlmann says that the sales of the Poehlmann Bros. Co. for December 23 set a new record for the concern, well in advance of the previous high record. But the same day he bought 114 cars of coal and just a little while before 1,500 boxes of glass, so the money isn't all profit.

"Billy" Kidwell was looking for more of the Mrs. Jardine rose December 27. He told Wietor Bros. that it was a better seller than Killarney with his best Christmas customers.

W. F. Hoerber is well pleased with his first Christmas and says that he regrets the truth of the old saying that Christmas comes but once a year. They had a larger cut than at any time heretofore and not enough stock to go around.

Andrew McAdams was downtown December 27 for the first time in some months. He said it was a good Christmas, but that Christmas never brings the retailer enough profit to pay for the extra work and anxiety, and that he is glad when regular business is on again.

John Zech says Texas buyers do not want Killarney or White Killarney; that Maid and Bride are the roses called for on shipments to the extreme southwest; New Orleans prefers the Killarneys.

Mrs. W. E. Lynch was called to her former home at Hatfield, Mass., December 26, by the critical illness of her mother. Mr. Lynch said that the house of E. H. Hunt never had a better Christmas in the cut flower department.

sold 1,500 more cattleyas. He lost some shipments of gardenias, delayed either by the storm or the big accumulation of freight in the express offices. There is much complaint of stock frozen, especially that bought by the retailers from out-of-town plantsmen.

Leonard Kill says that for three days in succession last week Peter Reinberg's sales exceeded all previous records. Mr. Kill plans to leave, January 4, to winter in California.

T. C. Yarnall, of the J. B. Deamud Co., who has been calling on growers, getting a line on what will be in market in the first part of the new year, says stock everywhere looks good to him and that the growers all say they are going to have good cuts and good quality from New Year's to Lent.

The building in which the Flower Growers' Market is located is already being remodeled, work having been begun in the basement. The changes on the market floor will be started right after the first of the year.

C. L. Washburn says that city florists have little conception of the storm of last week; it was the biggest in ten years, drifts four feet high at Hinsdale. Ned Washburn is now putting in the most of his time at the greenhouses.

Kyle & Foerster report Christmas as having exceeded their expectations because of the supply proving so generous.

J. H. Burdett is reported as having tendered his resignation as secretary of the Horticultural Society of Chicago.

Vaughan & Sperry say all the city buyers would have had a Merry Christmas had it not been for the storm—and that's something nobody could help.

The florist bowlers will roll Saturday, right in the city tournament.

DAYTON, OHIO.

The Market.

It would be impossible to give other than a glowing report on last week's business, the weather being ideal and trade booming. Prices seemed to be no object to the people, and it might be added that prices were quite steep. While there were some in both wholesale and retail trade that backed down when prices were quoted to them, still at the same time there were others willing to pay the price and glad to get the stock. While crops were abundant for this season of the year, still there was not nearly enough to compete with the increasing demand. Red flowers, especially roses and carnations, were at a premium, and advance orders consumed the supply long before Christmas, and at the last minute the florist could get his own price for Rhea Reids or American Beauties. One of our Dayton florists asked as high as $30 per dozen for choice Beauties. Extra Bride, Maid and Killarney brought as high as $4 to $5 per dozen. But few complaints were made; stock seemed to be satisfactory and business so good that "kicking" was out of the question.

Carnations, valley, violets, Romans and Paper Whites sold remarkably well; in fact, everything that resembled a flower. Callas came in handy to make up the funeral orders, which came in to help keep up the rush of business. There was also a big demand for poinsettias, which also brought a good, stiff price. Holly, mistletoe and all Christmas greens were disposed of. The Christmas business started up Wednesday morning and kept up until after Christmas. Stock at the present time disappears as rapidly as it is cut.

Christmas Weather.

The weather was ideal for Christmas. Folks who were wishing for a white Christmas appeared disappointed until late Friday evening, when Dame Nature visited us with a quiet snow storm, which kept up steadily during the night. Christmas morning old Mother Earth was covered with a feathery blanket about six inches in depth, making a most beautiful and, according to reports, a merry Christmas for all. Since then we have had several snow storms, which have rendered it fine for sleighing in Dayton, a treat that Daytonians seldom get.

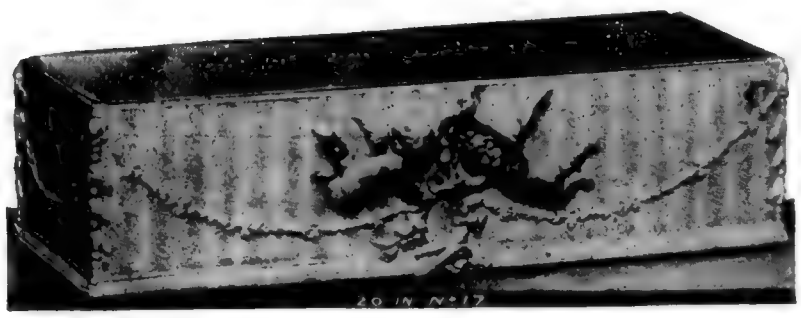
Various Notes.

On account of its being New Year's week the Florists' Club will not hold its regular monthly meeting until the second Monday in January.

The Miami Floral Co. says that it had never witnessed such an excellent Christmas trade as it did this year. People were seemingly easier to satisfy and no one was complaining. Trade with this company, as with other florists, made up for the dull season which was experienced before Christmas. The only complaint was the tired feeling caused by the continuous rush from early dawn till late at night. The Miami Floral Co. grew about 10,000 Paper Whites for the Christmas trade, out of which a good profit was realized.

M. Anderson says that he cannot help but feel satisfied with his trade through the holidays.

M. & L. Johnson report this year's Christmas trade far ahead of last year. Miss Minnie Johnson, who has been confined to her home for several months on account of sickness, was able to be at the store one day last week to help out, but it did not prove to be the best thing for her.



The Dayton Floral Co. feels perfectly satisfied that Christmas business this year was the best ever. The firm finds the demand for fancy baskets of plants increasing each year, as they did a big business along this line, not having enough to meet the demand. They also realized a good profit on Christmas greens, having sold 1,800 pounds of lycopodium. An unfortunate thing occurred

H. H. Ritter claims that he had the biggest Christmas trade this year that he ever had. He reports having realized a good business on orchids, with no funeral orders to interfere with business.

John F. Young is on the sick list. The rush of last week's business seems to have been too much for him.

Louis Schellhaas, of Miamisburg, took a run into Dayton December 27. He, too, reports a fine trade in Miamisburg.

Henry Ehrhard, of Sidney, and E. G. Hill, of Richmond, Ind., were visitors last week. R. A. B.

The Market.

Christmas of 1909 undoubtedly came up to all expectations. In fact, most of those who gave opinions stated that "it was a hummer." Pot plants were a big item; indeed, it seems that in numerous cases pot plants took the preference, no doubt due to their lasting quality and the lower price. There was no complaint of a shortage in Beauties, roses, carnations and the like. December 25 even found white carnations of good quality, and some of the colored varieties of poor quality, still unsold. Violets, which were equal to the demand, were good property and realized a good price.

The green goods market, which was well supplied, was cleaned up. Green wreaths, ground pine, etc., were scarce. The first holly that came in was of good quality, but the remainder was of inferior grade. In this city the wholesale produce commission men have for the last few years added holly to their Christmas stock, and have worked up enough trade to make it decidedly felt at the wholesale florists' shops. Poinsettias again proved to be the favorite cut flowers and reigned supreme. Stock, all in all, was of a fine quality.

Various Notes.

The Currie Bros. Co. claims that the volume of business this year exceeded that of last year, with an increased call for baskets of mixed plants. While they expected a limited call for these, they sold like hot cakes and kept them busy trying to keep up with orders. Their nice lot of azaleas was cleaned up in good season.

Wm. Zimmermann, who only conducts a store, laid in a large supply of pot plants, and he says that, owing to the unfavorable weather, there was not much doing till two days before Christmas, and then business came in a rush and proved to be the best up to date. He simply could not supply the demand for holly wreaths.

At the store of the Baumgarten Floral Co. the long suit was the poinsettia. They had their windows tastefully decorated with this flower, which no doubt was one cause of the extensive sales. Here, too, the complaint that holly was poor was heard; otherwise everything was quite satisfactory.

The M. A. McKenney Co. reports business for last week highly satisfactory in both cut flowers and pot plants, the latter making a better showing than in past seasons. They ran short on holly wreaths.

"A-No. 1" was the answer which came over the wire to the inquiry as to how the holiday business was with the Edlefsen-Leidiger Co. The volume of business was larger than last year, due, no doubt, to their branch store at 782 Third street, but what was more noticeable was the call for a better grade of stock in all lines; customers were more willing to pay a fancy price for good stock than in the last few seasons.

Robert Zepnick, 147 Lincoln avenue, says that, all in all, he was well satisfied and that the holiday business ran away ahead of expectations. December 27 found him extremely busy with funeral work.

The Wisconsin Floral Co. says that the price of cut flowers was too high, thus throwing a good many sales over to pot plants. The demand for holly wreaths was too brisk for the supply.

The Holton & Hunkel Co. says that the growers must simply produce high grade stock these days, if they expect to keep pace with the times. Especially was this noticeable in carnations. While orders for good stock were still coming in on the afternoon of December 23 and the supply exhausted, there was plenty of the poorer grades in stock, which, up to a late hour, still remained unsold. Shipping trade, which commenced Tuesday, was better than ever before.

At the headquarters of the C. C. Pollworth Co. there was practically nothing left of the large Christmas stock of pot plants, cut flowers, etc., which were in evidence the week previous. Business was fine, with a noticeable increase in the shipping line.

The first club meeting for 1910 takes place January 6, and every member should be present. New officers will be installed. Let us help them make it the banner year by attending all meetings.

CLEVELAND.

The Market.

Reports on Christmas trade from the different florists in this vicinity seem to be most favorable; in fact, most of the retailers report a heavy increase in business. There seemed to be a good supply of almost everything, the retailers having no trouble in getting all the cut flowers they wanted. There was a scarcity of some kinds of pot plants and quantities were frozen in transit, making a bad matter worse. There was a decided falling off in the demand for Beauties and violets at the last moment, which left the Christmas morning shipments unsold.

Various Notes.

Knoble Bros. are more than pleased with the result of Christmas trade, having had an increase of fifty per cent over last year. This firm advertised in the daily papers for a week preceding Christmas, making special mention of boxwood wreaths, which they sold by the hundreds. It kept six wagons and two automobiles busy to deliver their output.

A. M. Albrecht reports having done twice the business of last year. He handled cut flowers of all kinds in quantity.

C. A. Bramley was a heavy buyer over the holidays, having had some large funeral orders besides his usual Christmas rush. Mr. Bramley was also fortunate in not having been injured when his wagon was hit by an automobile.

The Jones-Russell Co. is elated over the volume of trade done for the first holiday in business. It was above the highest expectations. This firm worked with all hands on until 8 p. m. Christmas night. They also report having many large decorations for the week between Christmas and New Year's.

Westman & Getz are more than pleased with the Christmas trade. They handled large quantities of fancy hampers and baskets filled with fancy foliage plants. Their call for cut flowers also was heavy.

Smith & Fetters report a heavy increase over a year ago. They also have a great number of decorations for this week.

John Kirchner had the best sale of Christmas plants in years. His cut flower trade was also up to the mark.

Peter Nichols, of the Arcade, sold quantities of wreaths of all kinds, also quantities of air plants in fancy brass dishes.

Milford Parks had a heavy call for violets, Beauties, Killarney and red carnations. His trade was far ahead of a year ago. B.

The J. M. Gasser Co. reports a most excellent Christmas trade. Everything sold well at a fair price. There was no advance in prices over former years, although roses and carnations were a decided improvement in quality over other Christmases. Killarney roses were particularly fine; in fact, better than any pink rose ever handled at any previous Christmas, and they cut 12,000 of them. Beauties were not abundant, and not of good color. Consequently there was not much sale for these. Snapdragons, gardenias, orchids, daffodils, pansies and mignonette were in evidence and sold well. Wallflowers, begonias, poinsettias and cyclamens took the lead in plants. The blizzard and snow storm arrived promptly on schedule time Christmas morning, delaying incoming shipments of flowers from the east. Violets were from twelve hours to two days late, causing considerable worry and disappointment to the retailers. Who should stand this loss, the shipper, the express company or the purchaser? It was not carelessness, or lack of effort, on the part of the first two named. The Gasser Co. made one shipment of 200 cypripediums to Montana. These had to leave a week in advance.

was deeply covered with snow, which made it difficult for delivering. The thermometer was down to 15 degrees and part of the time about zero. This required a great deal of covering to keep plants from freezing. The result was that the bulk of the stock sold had to be delivered Christmas day, and in some places it took all day to finish up. One florist was heard to say he would give $50 if he had one more large wagon that was heated, to get his orders out. By the looks of his orders he was badly snowed under.

In regard to stock, there were roses enough to meet the demand, but carnations were scarce and sold at $1 to $1.50 per dozen. Plants in pots took the lead. Begonias were first; they sold readily at from $1.50 to $10 each. Next came poinsettias in pans and baskets; few calls were made for them cut. There was a fair call for azaleas, but the supply was poor, few being in full bloom. They were hard to force into bloom, as most of them arrived late from Belgium. American Beauties sold well at a fancy price, the supply being rather short. Christmas trees sold well at 25 cents higher than last year, as the supply was short. Green goods sold so well the prices jumped up one-third by December 24. Holly was plentiful at prices the same as last year. Wild smilax was plentiful, in cold storage. There was a good demand for violets. The call for hyacinths was not so brisk; the supply equaled the demand. Narcissi sold well.

Twenty years ago we sold our first packet of seeds—our first case of bulbs, but never in all these years did we make as many new customers as in 1909.

We are also glad to say that our old customers—many of whom have been dealing with us since the foundation of our business—have shown an increased confidence in us during the year just passed.

To show our appreciation for these many favors, we intend to give our customers still better service—still better qualities—still better values—in the year now before us.

With our new twenty-acre trial grounds at Torresdale, Pa., our up-to-date store at 1018 Market Street, and our new "Tower Hall" Seed House at 518 Market Street, (illustrated above), we have the best equipped Seed and Bulb establishments in the East. The floor area of our stores and warehouses is over 59,000 square feet.

So with more facilities, more experience, and more workers—all under the vigorous, personal direction of the founder of this business, Mr. Henry F. Michell—we expect to do more business for more customers in 1910 than ever before.

Wishing you happiness and prosperity for the New Year, for all the year, and for all the years to come, we are, the Christmas trade, which made them an exceptionally busy day.

The Rosery could not supply the demand for poinsettias. All baskets and potted plants sold well. Mr. Ellsworth is well pleased.

The Alpha Floral Co. reports excellent business.

The five-story building where the Geo. M. Kellogg Flower Co.'s store was located was destroyed by fire December 23, a total loss on all stock and supplies. They have the deepest sympathies of the craft in this city for meeting with such bad luck just before Christmas. They now have opened at a new location, 323 East Ninth street, and are ready for business.

The Rock Flower Co. reports business good; better than ever before. Baskets and potted plants sold well. They could have sold more violets if on hand, but eastern shipments failed to get through on time.

Samuel Murray reports an extraordinary trade this year on Gloire de Lorraine. He says it was never better, and he seems well pleased with his share of the business. W. H. H.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The snow storm the day before Christmas and the cold weather Christmas day hurt the business but little this year, and from reports of most of the leading uptown florists the trade was great, and the reports from other parts of the city were about the same. We can safely say that the Christmas business done in cut flowers and plants in this city was one of the largest in years; it seems to increase each year. All four of our wholesalers say their business was much better than in any previous year. They had plenty of stock of everything and prices held up well until Christmas morning, when the values dropped. As usual, all the shippers held off until the last day, and more stock came in than they could dispose of.

Carnations were almost a glut Christmas morning. Violets sold well and there were enough to go around. California violets brought $3 per hundred, and doubles secured the same price. Pilcher's new violet, with 18-inch stems, brought $4 per hundred.

Roses of all varieties came in fine and were plentiful. All bulbous stock sold well. The weather was hard on the delivery of plants and cut flowers, which needed a great deal of extra wrapping, and many of the florists did not get through with delivery until late in the day. The demand for plants was, as usual, much greater than for cut flowers, and all favored the bright colors. Azaleas, poinsettias, Lorraine begonias, dwarf holly and orange trees sold best.

The trade in ground pine, wreathing, holly and mistletoe was good. Ground pine was scarce, but holly and mistletoe were plentiful and fine. The demand for wreaths was much better than last year, and everybody sold out of these.

The market at present is in good condition, with plenty of everything to be had. The wholesalers say they expect a great deal more business for New Year's than last year, as this day is again being more observed by the fashionable folks.

Various Notes.

The following firms all report a good Christmas trade: Fred C. Weber, Fred H. Weber, Ellison Floral Co., Kalisch Bros. Floral Co., Sanders Nurseries, George Waldbart, Ayers Floral Co., Eggeling Floral Co., R. J. Windler, G. Bergsterman, Charles Beyer, Miss Newman, Ostertag Bros., C. William C. Young left for a week's trip to New Orleans, La., Monday, December 27. He was accompanied by his youngest son, John. Mr. Young says he will return in time for the next club meeting and tell us all about New Orleans.

Mrs. Lisette Bruning, wife of F. W. Bruning, died last week at the age of 59 years. She was the mother of Mrs. Henry Berning and Otto Bruning. The funeral took place Sunday, December 26, from the residence of Henry G. Berning, and was private. Mr. and Mrs. Berning have the sympathy of the trade.

The Florists' Club's New Year's meeting, January 13, promises to be an interesting one. The trustees say they are working on a program that will make the first meeting in the new year one long to be remembered. Frank Fillmore's paper on "The Troubles of a Grower" will be worth while, so spend an afternoon with friends in the trade.

The Rising Eastern Market.

It was a white Christmas. So often has the weather been abused for adverse conditions at a critical stage that it is only fair to give praise for the benefits enjoyed by all branches of the profession. The plantsmen had splendid shipping weather up to a week before Christmas. The cut flower growers had bright, sunny days up to Christmas eve. The retailers had ideal shopping conditions until Christmas morning. Then came the severest snow storm in years, a storm that by Sunday blocked railroad and trolley service, impeded walking and cut off telephone and telegraph service to a degree, and would have caused widespread disaster a few days earlier. December 25, rather than November 25, was the real florists' Thanksgiving day of 1909.

The Christmas plant and flower business of last week was the largest this city has ever experienced. Growers, wholesalers and retailers agree in this statement. The crops were heavy, the quality was encouraging, the demand tremendous. The prices realized were equal to former years, as a rule, but it generally required a better plant or flower than formerly to bring the prices. In other words, the market was more critical. There was a general disposition to get the stock earlier than in the past, so by Christmas morning business was over, the late city orders usually filled up to morning, or even later, being fewer than common. This fact is explained by the unusual facilities and by the heavy supply. The shipping orders for cut flowers, filled chiefly December 22 and December 23, were unusually heavy, taxing the executive ability of the wholesalers to get them out on time. The stock at their command included much fine material that will increase the city's reputation as a flower center. There was some costly holding back, reduced by weather and wisdom gained in former years.

The local demand was peculiar. The retailers took pains to push plants, putting the excellent material at hand into attractive shape and buying cut flowers with caution, yet so strong was the popular interest in their stock that before the week was over they had bought cut flowers with a freedom that kept prices firm to the end.

Violets were a strong factor in the Christmas market, good stock realizing excellent prices. Poinsettias were in short supply. Red was in demand. Enormous quantities of Richmond were sold. Beauties also were popular. Killarney was in tremendous supply. The mediums and good shorts were not so numerous in proportion to the long stems, and prices ruled lower than a year ago. White roses were not in demand, although some fancy Bride brought extraordinary values. O. P. Bassett led the red varieties of carnations. Beacon also sold well. Enchantress and White Perfection were fine. Holding back and late shipments hurt the carnation market, which was dull after December 23. Choice cattleyas, dendrobiums, cypripediums, gardenias and select valley brought excellent figures. Callas were in limited supply and held firm. Easter lilies were in fair demand. The left-over chrysanthemums, chiefly Jones and some Nonin, gave good value when bulk was desired. The demand for greens was lighter than usual.

Of course, there are exceptions to this Christmas summary. Some did better, some worse, and some will say that their experience will not agree with the views given. To all these friends let me say that the market is now a large one, made up of many parts, and that what is written here is the honest opinion of one of your number, who is in touch with many of you.

The great storm has hampered business this week. Some of the left-over stock rushed in on the wholesalers unexpectedly December 25 has come in well, as shipments are delayed coming in town. This was also true of the shipments going out December 27. Prices have fallen and conditions are unsettled. Poinsettias are pretty well over. Greens are abundant.

The Social Season of 1910 will be shorter this year than for several years.

The Florists' Manual

A Business Book for Business Men

Second Edition

Thoroughly Revised and Brought up to Date

No dry-as-dust botanical classifications, but tells you just how to produce marketable plants and cut flowers in the best and cheapest way.

Treats of over 200 subjects and is freely illustrated with fine half-tone engravings.

Price, $5.00, prepaid by express or mail.

FLORISTS' PUBLISHING CO., Caxton Building, 334 Dearborn St., CHICAGO

Local business was paralyzed early this week by the heavy snow. Shipping has been excellent since Tuesday, when express service was resumed.

Mr. Fox's Views.

Charles Henry Fox, when asked about Christmas business, said that the red light had been heeded. The Sign of the Rose, Mr. Fox continued, had cut out the flowers that were considered unsatisfactory either from falling quickly or from being too expensive. Plants were featured, also roses and violets. Prices were kept as near normal as possible and fresh stock only was sent out. Christmas had proved most profitable managed in this way and made friends, not enemies. Mr. Fox expressed his belief more strongly than ever that more moderate Christmas prices would increase the prosperity of all branches of the profession, and added that a start has been made in the right path. A glance over the Sign of the Rose showed a clean sweep.

Various Notes.

The heavy Christmas snow damaged two houses of the Collingdale Greenhouses, at Collingdale, also two houses belonging to Charles M. Swayne, at Kennett Square. Some glass was broken in many other establishments. PHIL.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

The Market.

Christmas trade this year was the "best ever," running far ahead of last year. Potted plants were quite plentiful. All the best stock sold out rapidly, and all stock was fairly good. Azaleas and poinsettias were the favorites and not one was left that was at all salable. The pans of poinsettias that sold at from $2 to $4 seemed to suit the average pocketbook, though some pans and baskets sold at $5 to $15.

Azaleas brought from $1.50 to $8, and all kinds were cleaned up. Firefly, the baby azalea, while not in full bloom, sold out quickly at 75 cents and $1 per plant in 4-inch pots. A few were used in making up baskets and worked in nicely. A good many more could have been disposed of, but the supply was limited. Some good rhododendrons were to be seen and sold out nicely. It is a shame there are no good red ones to be had for this season, but white ones fill the bill just the same.

That ever popular plant, Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, was just as popular as ever, and big batches of them looked as if a cyclone had swept through and cleaned out all the choice stock. Primula obconica was quite plentiful and a good many pans were disposed of. The same can be said of that old favorite, the cyclamen. Another good thing that sold at sight and is a splendid Christmas plant, though not much grown, is the dwarf pepper plant.

The growers here are beginning to awaken to the fact that as many plants can be sold at Christmas as at Easter, and they are adding a few more to the list each year. May the good work keep on.

Potted plants, however, have one big drawback, which was severely felt this year; that is, the wrapping. The weather man handed us a lemon. Thursday was cold and fair and plants and boxes were wrapped in from four to six papers, to keep the frost out. Friday turned a little warmer in the morning, but plants had to be wrapped carefully. In the afternoon we were treated to a little snow, which turned into sleet and then into rain. Then, to top things off right, it turned cold about 4 p. m. and froze the whole mess, and it being too late to have horses rough-shod, delivering was a burden that was hard to bear. Christmas morning the streets were covered with about one inch of ice. The stores could not get the stock delivered on time and a number of complaints were heard.

Cut flowers were in good supply, with the regular Christmas prices. Poinsettias sold at from $3 to $6 per dozen and a good many were disposed of. The top price for Beauties was $20, the lowest $8 per dozen. Good Richmonds sold at $6 per dozen. Killarneys and other roses sold at from $3 to $6 per dozen. Violets were in good demand; the singles brought $3, while the doubles sold at $4 per hundred. Valley cleaned up at $1 per dozen, sweet peas at $4 per hundred, narcissi at 75 cents per dozen, and Romans the same. Good bouvardias sold at $1.50 per dozen, but the supply was quite short. Red carnations sold at $2 per dozen and other kinds at $1 and $1.50 per dozen. A few white mums were sold at $3 and $4 per dozen.

Other cut flowers and greens were in good supply. Holly was a little short and the quality was nothing extra. Quantities of winter berries were sold.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The weather for Christmas week could not have been improved if made to order. Right up to noon of Christmas day deliveries of plants were made without wrapping. Then came the snow storm, increasing at night to a blizzard. Drifts everywhere and stalled trains and delayed mails and shipments followed in its wake. In the wholesale cut flower market the accumulated cuttings of three days were arriving December 27. One firm received forty-four boxes of roses Monday morning. This is only the straw showing which way the wind was blowing. With the left-overs from the Christmas shipments, a slump in prices to about half the rates of the holiday was inevitable.

Few Christmas Beauties sold above the dollar mark, and these were the extra selected stock. Now they are down to 75 cents, and before the end of the week few will sell at this, unless the supply greatly decreases. Philadelphia is making this what one wholesaler called a dumping ground for its surplus. The best Richmonds brought 40 cents to 50 cents December 24. Three days later they went at 25 cents. Killarney, too, has fallen and 20 cents last week would have been a fairer average top. The shipments of this variety are enormous. Maid and Bride seldom sold above 12 cents. This week they will sell at 8 cents, and 10 cents will seem high enough for the Saturday New Year's celebration, which in late years has seldom been better than a good Saturday at its best. No special preparations are made for the New Year festival.

Few carnations sold above 10 cents, except the red varieties and the novelties, which are down already to 8 cents and 6 cents, and which will hold there for the week if the snow storms are over. Orchids are again abundant and 50 cents to 75 cents will be the limit. Cypripediums go slowly at 12 cents. The quality is above reproach. There are more growers than ever in this vicinity.

Violets held well, and $1 to $1.25 was realized for the special bunches of 100 at Christmas. The supply was enormous, however, and the left-over stock was going to the street men early this week at low rates. The fresh stock arriving every evening, however, should stay close to $1 per hundred, no matter how large the shipments.

The splendid weather last week was especially helpful to the growers. A few of them shipped their entire cut each morning, but many of them sent only limited shipments and held great quantities for Friday. Hence the avalanche and its inevitable result. If these men would ever learn common-sense methods and would stop this infernal pickling, everybody—grower, wholesaler and retailer—would be satisfied. But the selling of blooming plants, baskets, hampers and boxes of beautiful plant combinations continues to grow in volume every holiday, and will continue until the curse of delayed shipments and pickling is at an end. Even the honest growers, who do ship their full cutting daily, are injured beyond computation by this idiotic and oft-repeated scheme to realize high prices; wholesalers and retailers are both handicapped seriously.

The plantsmen and the retail distributors of plants had the Christmas of their lives, however, and were practically sold out by Christmas eve. Deliveries continued all through the night. Nearly every wholesale cut flower store was open until morning. After midnight the buyers were numerous and lunches and coffee were served the employees and visitors by Traendly & Schenck and many other prominent wholesalers.

Various Notes.

John Young, of Bedford, was an interested visitor and apparently the happiest of the crowd, with his big cut of Beauties. Mr. Young has opened an office in the Childs building on West Thirty-fourth street, and on the door it reads, "Office of the New York Florists' Club." Mr. Young says it means just what it says, and that any member of the club is welcome to its conveniences at any time.

As a sample of how the millionaires purchase plant combinations for Christmas gifts, one of them left an order for these baskets that aggregated $1,800—one order, remember, and to only twenty friends, an average to each of $90.

January 10 the Florists' Club will hold its meeting, an important one, as the year's committees will be appointed and the new officers will orate and special exhibits will be made. There should be a large attendance. The club retains its rooms in the Grand Opera House building.

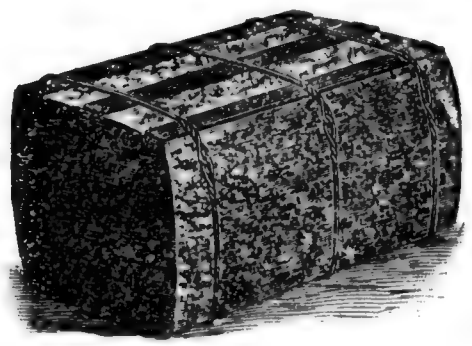
The Aphine Mfg. Co. is now the name of the insecticide enterprise with headquarters at Madison, N. J., under the management of M. C. Ebel. After New Year's, Boston, Philadelphia and Chicago will have public demonstrations of its efficiency.

The Wilson-Hoyt Co. has opened an office in the Metropolitan building, at 1 Madison avenue. H. H. Hasse, the secretary of the company, is in charge.

Charles Weber, of Lynbrook, is much enthused over the reception given his new pink carnation, and is arranging to put it on the market. It will compete for the honors at the Pittsburg meeting.

August Millang handled a large assortment of blooming plants last week, and cut orchids from Ordonez Bros., of Madison.

The raffle of Manager Jackson, of the Cut Flower Exchange, in the Coogan building, Friday, December 24, for two big turkeys, resulted in landing C. Bonnet and C. Smith, the wholesalers, as the lucky winners out of 100 aspirants.



The Christmas valley of W. H. Siebrecht, of Chappaqua and Astoria, was as perfect as any that ever reached the New York market.

The big plant houses are adding auto trucks to their conveniences. Both the large growers at Rutherford have them, and the retailers are leaning fast to auto methods of service, Myer, of Madison avenue, being the latest to add the rapid transit facilities.

A. T. Bunyard reports rapid progress in his new store.

The firm known as the Boston Florist, at Thirty-fourth street and Lexington avenue, will open a branch store next call being for azaleas, poinsettias, Lorraine begonias and cyclamens.

The Rush Floral Co. had a good trade in both cut stock and flowering plants. They disposed of a great many cut poinsettias and carnations.

William Trillow reports cash sales below last year, for which he blames the stormy weather, but his gross business was twenty per cent ahead of last year. Mr. Trillow does a large cemetery trade, as he is situated across the street from Woodland cemetery, and if the weather had been fine he would have sold many more wreaths and bunches for graves.

The Iowa Seed Co. reports a big business in holly, greens and mistletoe. In Christmas trees they could have sold another carload. In the flower department they did a rushing business, with all hands working overtime. Mr. Riley, the manager, had one of the prettiest window decorations in town.

The J. S. Wilson Floral Co. did a rushing business, both in blooming plants and cut flowers. The principal call was for azaleas, poinsettias, Lorraine begonias, cyclamens and primroses, in the order named. In cut flowers, Richmond and Killarney roses and O. P. Bassett and Lawson carnations had the call, with a heavy demand also for poinsettias. The gross Christmas business was fifty-five per cent ahead of last year.

Julius Ledig met with a serious misfortune about ten days before Christmas, in the loss of his entire greenhouse stock. There was a leak in the main gas pipe in the street, and the gas penetrated into the greenhouses, causing the leaves to drop off all the plants and killing all the carnation buds, Romans and Paper Whites. This practically left him without a flower for Christmas. Mr. Ledig has had a number of Des Moines florists appraise his damages, which amount to about $1,000. We hope he will be able to settle with the gas company without a suit. BOOSTER.

JANESVILLE, WIS.—Edward Amerpohl has a number of ferns that he considers better than Amerpohlii, but not sufficiently distinct to warrant putting them on the market.

KANKAKEE, ILL.—E. F. Ingham is making arrangements to conduct a business in flowers and plants at the office of the Taylor Coal Chute Co., in the Chritzman building, 126 North Main street.

SALEM, OHIO.

Christmas trade was good. Cut flowers were fully up to former years, and the blooming plant trade was far ahead of any year.

Joseph Bonsall, who has been in the flower business for over thirty years, says that there has never been the demand or the volume of business that there was this year.

John W. Scott, of Lisbon, O., reports that this year's business has set a new high-water mark in total sales. He has just finished a new greenhouse, 15x70, which he will plant to smilax.

V. A. Cowgill has just finished the building of six new houses, consisting of three carnation houses, one smilax house, a propagating and a forcing house; all of them combined contain about 16,000 square feet. This makes this entire place new in the last three years, with the exception of about 2,000 feet, and the place now consists of 40,000 square feet. In addition to the above, Mr. Cowgill has leased the rose houses of J. E. Bonsall, embracing about 38,000 square feet of glass, and these, in addition to his own rose house, 30x250, will mean a large number of Kaiserin roses. V. A. C.

OCONTO, WIS.—Joseph Sylvester says the wholesale plant trade for Christmas has been about as usual; no surplus of flowering plants of any kind.

GRAND RAPIDS.

The weather last week was wild and snowy, making good sleighing for Christmas. Although it was freezing and necessitated careful wrapping of every plant sent out, it was not unusually cold. Red carnations were scarce and in good demand, as were also red roses.

All flowers sold well, with the carnations in the lead. Roses, Romans, Paper Whites and particularly violets were sold out close. Many more violets could have been sold had they been procurable. The supply was fine, but the demand was greater.

In plants, this year, the azaleas seemed to lead and the supply was soon exhausted. Poinsettias were scarce and of course sold out close and a great many palms and ferns were sold, as well as Romans in pans and cyclamen plants.

In Christmas greens, holly led and large quantities were used. One firm, the A. J. Brown Seed Co., had about 100 girls making wreaths for about ten days and using hundreds of cases of holly, all of which sold out close. It is getting so that every house in town must have a wreath in every prominent window, and that takes a few wreaths and then some. Green wreathing and laurel were used to some extent, but not to the extent of former years.

As a whole, business was about the same as last year, and quite satisfactory. Shipping orders, at the start, came in rather slowly, but the last three days before Christmas they came with a rush and cleaned up the market in great shape. The demand for red is a steady feature with Christmas, and it seems that

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., J. C. Robinson, Waterloo, Neb.; First Vice-pres., M. H. Duryea, New York; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O.

THE German seeds are beginning to arrive in considerable quantity.

WORD comes from Japan that auratums are scarce in that country.

EVERY mail since Christmas has brought a couple of general seed catalogues.

W. W. BARNARD, Chicago, spent Christmas at St. Petersburg, Fla. A. H. Goodwin, of the Barnard Co., is in France.

HENRY FISH, Carpenteria, Cal., built a new warehouse this season, equipped with all the modern machinery for handling beans.

THE Ohio Valley Seed Co., Evansville, Ind., has increased its capital stock from $10,000 to $25,000. H. J. Graf is president.

AN advance copy of Burpee's general catalogue for 1910, styled the New Annual, instead of the Farm Annual as in the past, reached the REVIEW December 23.

THE call for auratum bulbs has not been as brisk as some of the seed houses anticipated, and it looks as though the supply might be all that the market would take.

VALLEY PIPS.

WITH THE CANNERS.

At the joint meeting of the executive committee of the National Canners' Association and the executive committee of the Canning Machinery and Supplies Association in Chicago last week, the latter organization pledged its hearty support to the national convention of 1910, to be held the second week in February at Atlantic City, N. J., and also reaffirmed its decision to hold no exhibit of canning machinery at that

Bismarck Summer-flowering Stocks
(GILLYFLOWER)

Golden Ball—Canary Yellow
NOVELTY 1910

For the Gardener interested in Cut Flowers, this is just the right thing. The Best Novelty in the World. The Bismarck Summer-flowering Stock makes cone-shaped bushes, about 3 feet high, with wonderfully large, canary yellow clusters. It blooms throughout the entire summer season and even into the late fall. This Bismarck Summer Stock produces about 80% double flowers and is indispensable for the artistic work of the modern florist. When placed on the market in the form of a pot plant, it has no equal. This Season's Best Novelty. 1 package, 15c; 10 packages, $1.25; 100 packages, $11.00.

Bismarck Stocks Snowball, Snow White Novelty of 1909

This new kind has the same good qualities as the above mentioned novelty. The flowers are very large, snow white and are splendid as cut flowers and for sale on the market. 1 package, 15c; 1000 seeds, 50c; ¼ oz., $1.50; 1 oz., $5.00.

Giant Summer Stocks Gloria, Bright Blood Red—Excelsior Class.

Produces panicles of great length, bright and blood red; the flowers are gigantic. Great novelty. Fine for cut flowers. 1 package, 15c; 1000 seeds, 65c.

Summer Stocks Himmelsauge (Eye of the Sky).

Belonging to the dwarf class; novelty; wonderful light blue color; the best for pot culture; produces from 80% to 85% double flowers. 1000 seeds, 30c; ¼ oz., 90c.

Dresden Summer Stocks, with large Blossoms and Everblooming.

Best for cut flowers. 1, apple blossom; 2, dark blue; 3, light blue; 4 flesh colored; 5, dark blood red; 6, chamois; 7, soft rose; 8, purple carmine; 9, red brown; 10, crimson; 11, canary yellow; 12, snow white.
Each color separate, 1000 seeds, 25c; ¼ oz., 60c; 1 oz., $2.00. Sample package, all colors mixed, 1000 seeds, 20c; ¼ oz., 50c; 1 oz., $1.60.

Erfurt Summer Stocks, with Large Blossoms; Best for Groups.

1, brilliant rose; 2, carmine; 3, crimson; 4, dark violet; 5, dark blood red; 6, flesh colored; 7, canary yellow; 8, light blue; 9, aurora colored; 10, pure white.
Each color separate, 1000 seeds, 25c; ¼ oz., 60c; 1 oz., $2.00. Sample package, all colors mixed, 1000 seeds, 20c; ¼ oz., 50c; 1 oz., $1.60.

English Summer Stocks De Luxe Mixture, Seeds from the Open Ground.

¼ oz., 35c; 1 oz., $1.10.

time. Publicity for canned goods will be the principal theme at the Atlantic City convention.

Promoters are at work on a plan to bring together the Canadian canneries with a view to forming a merger of the industry. It appears that at present the Canadian Canners, Limited, with headquarters at Hamilton, controls between thirty and thirty-five canning companies. There are fifty-one independent canners in the country, distributed between Montreal and British Columbia.

"It is of course too early to predict what the canning season will bring forth for next year," said a well known operator in canned goods. "The corn pack has been much reduced this year on account of weather conditions, and it is understood that the acreage for vegetables for canning purposes will be large for next year, so that if the crops are good there should certainly be a large pack for 1910."

The price of packers' cans was reduced last week to a point where cans are cheaper today than for three years.

SEEDING OF WAVED SWEET PEAS.

[A synopsis of a paper by William Cuthbertson, of Dobbie & Co., Mark's Tey, England, read at the conference of the National Sweet Pea Society in London, England, December 10, 1909.]

Those of you who remember the story of "The Vicar of Wakefield" will remember how smoothly ran the career of the family until the eldest son left Oxford and the elder daughter came to a marriageable age. You will remember the loss of the vicar's fortune and the other remarkable adversities which followed in its train—the selling of the horse by Moses for £3 5s 2d, which, instead of bringing home in cash, Moses (who was the second son of the family) converted, at the instigation of a sharper, into "a gross of green spectacles."

Now, for 200 years the career of the sweet pea ran its course as unperturbed as did the family life of the vicar of Wakefield at first. But we are now embarked on trying times and all our troubles date from the advent of Cole's Countess Spencer, but I am sure we can follow the simile of "The Vicar of Wakefield" a little farther. The story ends as all good stories ought to end—most of the characters got married and lived happily ever afterward. I am sure something good is also in store for us sweet pea growers. Out of our troubles our flower will emerge like gold from the furnace of the refiner.

Certainties and Uncertainties.

In the early days we dealt with certainties. In these days we deal with uncertainties. Speaking of certainties reminds me of a visit I once paid to my friend R. Sydenham. He took down a great volume in which he had entered up for years all the sweet peas he had sent to be grown in America, and with that exactitude for which he is famous, he had scheduled the produce of every seed sent. For example, he bought 100 packets of a novelty, and he knew almost to a pound how much seed he was going to get back and that it would be practically true. So did all of us. My firm's practice was to sow four ounces to 100 feet, and we knew what the produce would be in five seasons out of six. But all that is changed. We have entered on the "green spectacle" period.

Last season was altogether an abnormal one, and I am not, therefore, disposed to argue from the experience of it, but if we look at an average season I think you will agree with me if I put it that on an average the old type seeds ten times better than the Spencer type. Having said that, I have not said all, because a number of the finest Spencers are far below the average, and are nearer being twenty times worse seeders. Think of Etta Dyke and Dorothy Eckford—Clara Curtis and Mrs. Collier or James Grieve—The King and King Edward VII—Mrs. Chas. Foster and Lady Grisel Hamilton—Earl

WM. ELLIOTT & SONS

NEW YORK, N. Y.

Spencer and Henry Eckford—Mrs. Hardcastle Sykes and Prima Donna.

Let me explain the process of fertilization, i. e., what must actually take place before we can have any seed at all in any of the types. [After explaining the process Mr. Cuthbertson continued.]

Accidental Cross Fertilization.

Some people argue that sweet peas are pollinated by wind-borne or insect-borne pollen, and that accounts for the variations we get in so many stocks of Spencer sweet peas. I have never been able to subscribe to this theory, because I think I have had as large an experience as most, and have not observed it happen in practice. The plan we adopt at Mark's Tey is to grow the different varieties in lines 100 feet long. There may be four lines of The Marquis, followed closely by four lines of Countess Spencer, then four lines of Helen Lewis, and so on. If the wind or insect theory of cross fertilization held good we should not get pure seed, but as a matter of fact we do. Then again, it is suggested that in America there must be insects, unknown in this country, at work there to give us the fine variations we so frequently get! I should like to have Mr. Burpee's or Mr. Morse's opinion on this point. Fifty years ago so extremely careful an observer as Charles Darwin wrote: "Whatever the cause may be, we may conclude that in England the varieties of sweet peas never or very rarely intercross. But it does not follow from this that they would not be crossed by the aid of other and larger insects in their native country."

Before concluding, there is another condition of things which I must speak of—the liability of the pods after they are formed to rot off. Last season this was particularly noticeable. Close to the footstalk the pods became brown, as if at-

LILY OF THE VALLEY FOR PROMPT DELIVERY

EXPOSITION GRADE. This is an extra fancy grade of Berlin crowns. There are never enough of them to supply the demand. Out of Mr. Reimschneider's entire growing, he usually has only 50,000 to 75,000 of this grade, which is evidence of the care with which they are selected. In cases of 2000 crowns, at $30.00 per case.

PERFECTION GRADE. This is a true Berlin, extra selected, 3-year-old straight, long, clean crown with long, fibrous roots. Under proper treatment, they force out with tall racemes, bearing the maximum number of large bells, free from decay at the bottom. The foliage is ample but not too abundant. In cases of 1000 pips, at $13.00 per case.

HOLSATIA GRADE. These are suitable for later forcing, or for cold storage purposes, and are highly recommended to seedsmen. Very fine selected 3-year-old Hamburg Pips, very heavy roots, extra strong growth. Will hold over well in cold storage and produce good flowers the following fall. In cases of 2500 pips, at $30.00 per case.

Forcing Gladiolus

Many florists plant these in boxes, or among their carnations, in the winter. They are excellent for decorative purposes and realize good prices, either wholesale or retail. Gladiolus are a good catch crop and take up but little room. The following are the best for this purpose.

Gladiolus Gandavensis Hybrids

America. The flowers, which are of immense size, are of the most beautiful flesh-pink color. $3.25 per 100; $30.00 per 1000.

Augusta. The florists' best white Gladiolus. First size bulbs, 1¾ inches and up. $2.00 per 100; $18.00 per 1000.

Bulbs, 1½ to 1¾ in., $1.75 per 100; $16.00 per 1000.

May. Pure white, flaked rosy crimson; the best forcer. Selected bulbs, $1.75 per 100; $15.00 per 1000.

Shakespeare. White and rose. $4.75 per 100; $45.00 per 1000.

Brenchleyensis (true). Fiery scarlet. Selected bulbs, $1.50 per 100; $13.00 per 1000. First size bulbs, $1.25 per 100; $10.00 per 1000.

Boddington's White and Light. Extra selected bulbs, 1¾ in. and up. $1.50 per 100; $14.00 per 1000.

Bulbs, 1½ to 1¾ in., $1.25 per 100; $10.00 per 1000.

American Hybrids. A mixture of the choicest varieties of Gladiolus in cultivation. $1.00 per 100; $9.00 per 1000.

"NOT HOW CHEAP— BUT HOW GOOD"

Horseshoe Brand Products

You have noticed a dog turn around several times before lying down. It is from a habit supposed to have originated at a time in canine history when the dog was wild and inhabited jungles or tall grass, making it necessary to turn around several times before the grass could be twisted into a comfortable position. This habit became so fixed that the modern dog has not yet outgrown it. It is a bad babit, because it is unnecessary. Some growers are ruled largely by habits hard to outgrow. Good habits are a decided advantage, so cultivate them. It is a good habit to buy the best bulbs you can buy, because they average the greatest profit. If you want good bulbs, try the Horseshoe Brand.

tacked by a fungus. When this happened the pods were doomed. It was only a matter of a few days until they dropped off. This remark reminds me of something else. After the petals dropped on some varieties—notably on Earl Spencer and Edrom Beauty—the young pod appeared all right, but on the slightest touch it dropped off. I remember one evening William Deal and I were examining some rows at Mark's Tey, and he remarked, "You have a good promise here." I took out a pencil and walked along the row, merely touching the young pods with it, and quite fifty per cent of them dropped. I think the abnormally cold weather had much to do with this.

Imperfect Fertilization.

To sum up, I must put as the first and foremost cause of imperfect seeding in Spencer varieties the open keel in conjunction with the protruding stigma, otherwise imperfect fertilization; then the extreme sensitiveness of the type to adverse weather conditions. Its very shape, the large waved standard, makes it much more sensitive than the old type. How often have we noticed in bad weather the standard almost rotting and falling down and clasping the keel and pod! Sunshine supervening after such conditions made the standard adhere to the keel and pod as if they had been glued round them, and they could only be removed by being pulled sharply.

Permit me, in conclusion, to say that to all but the seed grower this non-seeding is an advantage. It means a longer continued period of bloom, and this must enhance the value of the sweet pea as a decorative object. The consolation I would offer the seed grower is this: The choicest things in the world—the things most worth having—are the things most difficult to get. Nature seems to decide for us that the more perfect we make her productions from our point of view, the more difficulty we shall encounter in reproducing them. This law holds good right through the floral world.

HOW BEANS ARE HANDLED.

When the crops of beans are ripe for the harvest the vines are pulled and thrown into rows. They are raked into piles, and then go to the bean threshing machine, and from the machine they pour into the bags, and when the farmer thinks he needs the money they are brought to market. The beans are emptied from the bags into big bins, usually located, for convenience, in the basement. From the basement they are hoisted by bean elevators to the top floors, and by gravity they flow to the cleaning machines on the second floor, and then, with all the sand and dirt and dust removed, they drop again to the basement. When the cleaned beans are to be hand-picked they are elevated a second time to the top floor, and this time go into big hoppers from which radiate many pipes to the picking tables. The picking tables are probably a foot wide, of a height convenient for a girl to sit at, and the top, instead of being solid, is a canvas belt, which by means of rollers beneath is made to move steadily toward the girl seated in front. The beans from the big hopper near the roof flow down through the pipes to the little hoppers just above the center of the tables. From the little hoppers the beans feed upon the endless belts, carrying them for inspection before the quick eyes and nimble fingers of the girl picker. The girl notes the discolored, broken and imperfect beans, and she grabs them, letting the good beans pass, to drop where the endless belt turns into a chute that lands them in the hoppers below. From the hoppers the cleaned and hand-picked beans are run into bags ready for the market. From the farm to the retail dealer the beans are handled many times and go through a variety of processes, but nowhere along the route does the human hand necessarily come into actual contact with them.

The bad and defective beans that are picked from the endless belt are dropped by the girl into convenient openings on either side of the table, and run into a bag conveniently placed. The girls are paid according to the number of bad beans captured, and they make from $4 to $8 a week, depending on their skill and quickness alike of eye and fingers. If the bad beans seem to be coming faster than they can be picked out, the girl by the pressure of her knee can stop the belt and take her time. Each girl's bag is inspected before payment is made, as a safeguard against the temptation to throw in good beans to increase the pay. When such practices are detected the penalties are sufficiently severe to make a repetition unlikely.

BURPEE'S NEW ANNUAL.

A first edition of more than 400,000 copies! Think of it! What author would not rejoice at so great a following? Verily, Mr. Burpee's place in the literature of gardening and floriculture is made secure by the number of those who each year look forward to the arrival of that idyl of the soil which comes with the change of seasons, the Farm Annual—this year styled the New Annual, for it is new, from cover to cover. As Fra Elbertus, himself a literator of no uncertain standing, doubtless recognizing the craftsmanship of a kindred spirit, once said: "Until you have read this year's Annual you are behind the calliope in the procession of garden progress." BALTIMORE.

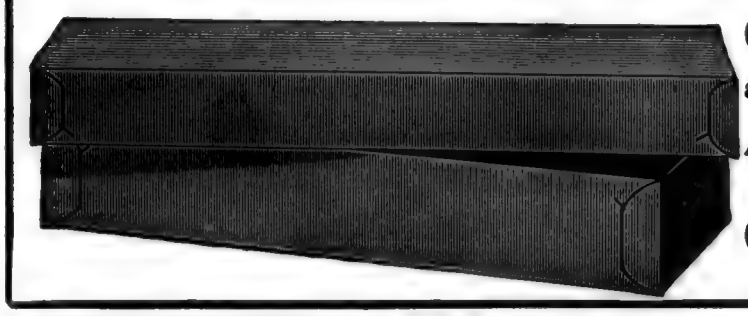
The Market.



Christmas business was excellent, and almost everyone reports a larger volume of trade than for the corresponding period last year. Weather conditions were good, with the exception of high winds on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. On Friday we had an ideal day, with the temperature around 40 degrees. The stores were never more attractive than this season. Plants always are a prominent holiday feature, and this year the demand was even greater. Poinsettias were in heavy demand, both as cut flowers and as pot plants, and some excellent ones were to be had, with better color and larger bracts than usual. Azaleas were fairly plentiful and were finely flowered. Cyclamens were everywhere. As a whole, the stock was excellent. White and crimson were the favorite colors. Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, as offered, was a fine plant. Take it all in all, the plant trade was the best ever known.

Carnations were not so plentiful, but there were enough to fill all orders, except in scarlet. The ruling price the retailers received for carnations was from $1 to $1.50 per dozen. Violets were scarce, with an exceptionally heavy demand; they brought from $3 to $4 per hundred. Roses were not so plentiful as was expected, but those that were to be had were of fine quality, with a heavy demand for red and pink.

There was an enormous lot of dry flowers used and a large supply of solid pieces of immortelles, due mostly to the scarcity of all kinds of greens. Holly was not so good as in previous years, and what was to be had was from the eastern shore of Maryland.

We were visited with one of the heaviest snow storms we have had on Christmas day in twenty-five years. It began to snow at 7 o'clock in the morning and never stopped till 9 o'clock at night, and there was a heavy wind, which caused drifts from six to eight feet deep.

Various Notes.

R. Vincent, Jr., & Sons Co. has just finished two new greenhouses, 35x200 feet, of modern construction, to be used for cannas and dahlias. The benches are to be built across the width of the houses, with an aisle seven feet wide on both sides the full length of the houses, so as to use a four-wheeled truck to handle the pot plants. The material was from the Lord & Burnham Co., and the boiler was a large Furman, installed in a new concrete boiler shed. The bars were all dipped in creosote instead of being painted.

Charles Cook had some of the finest cyclamens seen around here this season.

James Glass did a heavy Christmas trade in ferns, berried plants and fern dishes. Q.

GREENSBURG, IND.—Dille & Konzelman will build a range in the spring to grow cut flowers for the wholesale market. W. C. Konzelman has been grower for the Ira Clark Co.

The Market.

Although it is still two days before Christmas at the time of writing, the indications show that, in a general way, it is safe to say that the gross amount of sales for the entire holiday trade will be fully up to that of one year ago, but the demand for stock will not be along the same lines. The weather for the last ten days has been all that could be desired. Warm, bright days and cold, frosty nights lengthened the buying season so much that there was no rush at the last moment, as we usually have at this season. When the days are stormy, the flower-buying public always puts off its flower purchasing until the last moment, and, as a result, much trade is not waited on properly. This was a banner year in this regard. There was no undue haste necessary at any time and the orders came in so steadily that delivery was a pleasure.

But to return to business itself. The demand, early in the week, was almost entirely for roses and stocks were quickly bought up. When the shortage appeared, as it did about the middle of the week, the buyers had to be contented with short-stemmed stock and they then turned their attention to carnations. These appeared at first to be a glut, but at the week's end all were spoken for. The growers advanced prices fully 100 per cent in the last forty-eight hours. All kinds of fancy stock sold for $1 per dozen, and about half that price for short stems.

Violets, owing to the slight rainfall during the last two weeks, were scarcer and the prices were given a boost by the growers. Only a limited amount could be had and they were charged to the stores at the rate of $1 per dozen bunches. Valley is scarce and the supply only fair in quality, with a wholesale price of $5 per hundred.

Although quite a quantity of poinsettias was received from southern California growers, they were not strictly first-class and many of the retailers refused to handle them. The main trouble seems to be the inability of landing them here with any foliage left on the stems. However, the locally grown stock moved well and from all accounts everyone will sell out completely.

There was but a limited demand for large ferns and palms in pots. The flower-buying public seemed only to want the smaller sizes of both these articles and when $2 or more was asked for a plant, the customer usually spent the amount in cut flowers. All sorts of pans and pots of Primula obconica, cyclamen, hyacinths and begonias found a ready sale and these, together with a few azaleas, made up a great portion of the trade. Red berries and wreaths could be had on almost every street corner and the supply seemed to be inexhaustible. The hucksters were more in evidence this year than ever before. A proper summary of trade for the holidays of 1909 would be that the bulk of the sales was fully up to that of last year, but the individual amounts were smaller and the selling season at least four or five days longer.

EARLY CABBAGE PLANTS.

Can Early Wakefield cabbages be grown in 4-inch pots to set out about May 15? What time would you start the seed to have strong plants from 4-inch pots? I am located in New York state. W. B.

Yes, early cabbages can be started in pots, just the same as tomatoes, and can be grown to nice plants when put in the field, but they are seldom grown in pots. I have known some market gardeners to grow them in 2-inch pots and have nice little plants for the fields, but 4-inch pots would take up entirely too much room for such cheap stuff as cabbage plants. A cabbage head is worth only about 5 cents when cut from the garden, while you ought to grow something on your benches that would net you more than that at wholesale when taken from 4-inch pots in the spring. Greenhouse room is too valuable in the spring for 4-inch cabbages, and most growers think 2-inch pot grown ones are too expensive.

Another point worth mentioning is the time of planting out; you say about May 15. They are better off in the field four or five weeks earlier than that. Cabbage plants stand hard freezing if they are grown cool and are strong and healthy when put out. Last year I had plants out in the field as soon as the frost was out of the ground so we could work it. This was about April 1 and in your latitude. The ground froze somewhat on many nights afterward, and it was such a cold April that I thought they were ruined. They did not grow much and looked more like red cabbages after the cold spell was over, but they started to grow and did well as soon as the weather warmed up a little and came in two weeks ahead of those planted out after the cold wave.

I think the best way is to plant the seed about the last week in February, and as soon as they are up transplant them into flats and keep them in the greenhouse for a week or two, until well started; then carry them out into the coldframes. Have plenty of manure around the frames, with an extra supply to cover over the sash with on any extremely cold nights, until they are planted out. H. G.

EVANSVILLE, IND.

The Market.

So far as making deliveries was concerned, the weather was extremely bad for the florists, but to people in general the weather was all right, as we had a white Christmas, something that has not happened here for a number of years. The day before Christmas started in with sleet and rain, turning to snow later, with a strong wind blowing. Plants had to be wrapped and this required extra work. However, everyone did a big business.

Plants were plentiful. Roses, carnations and other cut flowers were scarce, considering the demand, though carnations were in better than roses. Beauties brought as high as $12 per dozen and other roses $1.50 to $3. Carnations sold for $1 to $1.50. Red carnations, being scarce, brought $1.75 to $2. Paper Whites sold at 75 cents per dozen.

Various Notes.

The William Blackman Floral Co. was crowded at all times. Their supply of plants was big and the demand good. Red carnations were scarce, but other carnations were more plentiful. The rose cut was short. Business was fully up to the mark for last year.

Julius Niednagel & Sons sold out of everything. Plants were fine and sold fast. They had a good cut of carnations. Roses were not so plentiful.

Benjamin Kramer did a big business, having but little of anything left.

J. C. Elsperman reports business as fine.

Henry Seymour refused lots of orders. Stock was scarce with him. E. L. F.

GREENSBURG, IND.—John L. Dille and William C. Konzleman will locate a flower growing business in this city.

RAYMOND, N. H.—Irvin Folsom reports under date of December 16 that up to that time the weather here was unusually mild and dry, and there were fears of a shortage in the water supply.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.
Officers for 1909-10: Pres., F. H. Stannard, Ottawa, Kan.; Vice-Pres., W. P. Stark, Louisiana, Mo.; Sec'y, John Hall, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. Thirty-fifth annual meeting, Denver, June, 1910.

It is estimated that the orders for spring delivery, booked by the retail nurseries, are twenty-five per cent ahead of last year at this date.

The Richland Nursery Co., of Richland, Wash., has been incorporated, with a capital of $25,000, by C. F. Breithaupt, J. H. James, J. C. Breithaupt and W. J. Breithaupt.

Stark Bros. Nurseries and Orchards Co., Louisiana, Mo., made a display of apples at the recent meeting of the Illinois State Horticultural Society at Champaign, attracting much attention.

Growers of apple trees are looking forward to a demand at least equal to the supply for several years to come. The supply of apple seedlings of the better grades is decidedly short of the needs of the trade this season.

The wholesale nurseries are feeling quite cheerful as a result of the strong demand and better prices—the best prices in some years. But good prices are necessary; the cost of producing nursery stock has advanced, along with the advance in costs in other lines.

WESTERN NURSERYMEN MEET.

The Western Association of Nurserymen held a two days' convention at the Coates House, Kansas City, December 21 and 22. Officers were elected as follows: President, J. H. Skinner, Topeka; vice-president, E. S. Welch, Shenandoah, Ia.; secretary and treasurer, E. J. Holman, Leavenworth, Kan.

The principal business in addition to the election was the making of arrangements for the annual meeting of the National Association of Nurserymen in Denver in June of next year. The western nurserymen will entertain the national body.

RHODODENDRONS.

Parasitic Plants on the Roots.

"Do not apply manure to rhododendrons, as there is a plant parasite that grows on the roots, which plant is killed by the manure, eventually causing the death of the rhododendrons."

This information, imparted to me a few days ago by a practical nurseryman, was so entirely antagonistic to my observations and practical experience of over twenty years in propagating and growing one of the largest stocks of rhododendrons in Europe, that it caused me to wonder if environment had any influence in changing the character and nature of plants so much as to demand an entire change of treatment. So far as I have heretofore been informed, the only plant supported by the root of the rhododendron is the rhododendron itself, and the following case, which came under my notice a few years ago, will go to prove that they are benefited by the application of manure. There was an avenue of over 1,500 plants which were turning yellow and dropping their leaves to an alarming extent. Being called to examine these plants and to prescribe for their recovery, and having ascertained that the drainage was all right, I had them mulched six inches deep with moss litter manure. This was taken from stables where moss litter was used for bedding horses, and, as you will know from the absorbent nature of the moss, it contained nearly all the urine as well as the excretion of the animals, making it one of the strongest natural manures. This lay as a surface mulch throughout the winter, and was forked lightly into the soil in the spring, and I can conscientiously say, from close and careful observation, that the effects of the above application were everything that could be desired. These plants, for years after the application, were one of the finest sights in the country, with their wealth of foliage and bloom. I have also used well rotted manure with success in growing them in the nursery for over twenty years, surely disproving the statement which begins this article.

Peat in the Soil.

There is a prevalent idea, even among nurserymen, that a peaty soil is indispensable for rhododendrons, and often great expense is incurred in bringing peat from a distance in order to make a rhododendron bed. The digging out of the solid, natural soil and replacing it with peat not infrequently leads to a greater evil, one that is seldom foreseen. The new peat acts as a drain for the surface water percolating the ground surrounding it, and the spongy peat holds the water precisely as a sponge does; consequently the bed becomes waterlogged and the failure of the rhododendrons is a natural sequence.

It is pretty generally known that rhododendrons and most other plants of that tribe abhor chalk or any kind of calcareous soil, and, if planted in it, they soon languish and eventually die outright. On the other hand, it is questionable whether the rhododendron likes peat above all other soils. Cases have come under my notice of the finest specimens—finest in growth, foliage and flower—which were growing in fibrous loam with an admixture of a little peat and sand, sufficient to make the whole porous, yet not too light.

The question of peat versus loam for these glorious plants is one of importance to owners of private gardens, who, as a rule, if not located on a peaty soil, bewail the absence of rhododendrons. There must be thousands of gardens where the soil is not peaty and yet is free from chalk, and where rhododendrons would grow to perfection, but from which they are now absent because their owners think it useless to plant them. Or, on the other hand, their culture has been abandoned after the expense of making peat beds, the failure of which had probably arisen from defective draining.

Pardon me if I have digressed from the usual method of asking information through the REVIEW, but I thought that a few remarks about my practical experience and results obtained therefrom might be appreciated by the readers, and that some of them might give me information as to the name of the plant (if there is such) that grows on the root of the rhododendron and is killed by the application of manure. DRACUT, MASS.

Before James J. McManmon built his greenhouses here he had been growing flowers on leased land in Lowell, where his store is still located. He started here fourteen years ago, by buying what was then spoken of as one of the worst pieces of land in the town—a tract of five acres given over to scrub growth and sorrel, and considered so sour and so unfit for cultivation that the neighboring farmers grinned in good-natured pity of the purchaser. Now Mr. McManmon owns fifty acres, one acre of which is under glass, while the rest of it is largely devoted to nursery stock. Among the tropical shrubs in his greenhouses are oranges and lemons in fruit.

He bought most of the land during a period of industrial depression, when he could secure it at a low price. Now the property is quite valuable, partly on account of its own transformation under Mr. McManmon's energetic management, and partly on account of the improvement in surrounding real estate. It was necessary to reclaim some of the ground by drainage and to clear some of it with dynamite, and most of it was sprinkled to an inconvenient extent with rocks and stones. Every stone used in the foundations of all the buildings that Mr. McManmon has erected, excepting his greenhouses, which are now of cement, has come from his farm, and apparently he has used only a small fraction of the supply. One observer states that enough stones have been removed from the ground, by Mr. McManmon and others, to "pretty nearly build a cathedral."

ADMIRATION

This carnation we offer to the trade as being one of the finest Carnations of any color that we know of up to date. Being a beautiful shade of pink, somewhat lighter than Winona, having that beautiful satin finish, always showing up well either in natural or artificial light. Plants benched in August are now coming into full crop, carrying from 10 to 20 buds. We have been cutting since September 10th. As a money maker you will find no equal.

The size of the flower is 3 to 3½ inches, excellent form, well built up in the center, with the petals so arranged as to make it stand the general requirements of a good fancy commercial variety. A grand keeper and shipper.

The habit is ideal, upright with no surplus grass and every shoot going into flower. Its freedom and earliness make it nearly the ideal carnation. The calyx is very tough and seldom bursts. Can be handled with great success either from the field or grown inside all summer. No one has to be an expert to handle this variety. It scored 86 points at the American Carnation Society meeting at Indianapolis, January 27 to 28, 1909.

Price, $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

ST. PAUL.

The Market.

The Christmas spirit has pervaded the air, which means that everyone connected with the trade has been busy. And all this bustle and activity has meant good business for one week, at least.

There have been plenty of doings all the month. Society has bestirred itself, and the usual lull before the holidays has not been apparent this season, for receptions, balls, parties and weddings have followed one another in close succession.

The switchmen's strike has tied up traffic somewhat, so that holly shipments have been late, while the intense cold was liable to damage this much used decorative. Express shipments were delayed and in several instances were frozen. Whether the express companies will be responsible for the losses remains to be seen.

Club Meeting.

The State Florists' Association held its monthly meeting December 14. There was a good attendance, a good display of exhibits and an interesting program.

Professor Freeman, of the State Agricultural School, spoke on "The Fungous Diseases of Plants," illustrating his lecture with several specimens. Many questions were asked and many points discussed, and all went home with the belief that they had received valuable information.

The following exhibits were staged: By L. S. Donaldson Co., cyclamen plants; by Will Bros., White Enchantress, Rose-pink Enchantress and Beacon carnation blooms; by Hiawatha Gardens, begonias and cyclamens; by Holm & Olson, Lorraine, Gertrude and Agatha begonias, cyclamen and poinsettia plants.

An entertainment committee was appointed to arrange for a ball to be given in Minneapolis.

Various Notes.

The Holland travelers are with us again, each telling of the superiority of his bulbs. Charles Schwake, of New York, was also a recent caller. X. Y. Z.

Nephrolepis Elegantissima Compacta

Another New Fern Originating with us Introduced fall 1909

Of all the valuable introductions in ferns that we have sent out, beginning with the Pierson (Nephrolepis Piersoni), we consider the Elegantissima compacta the most valuable of all, particularly from a commercial standpoint.

While this resembles Elegantissima in a general way, it is far superior to that variety, on account of its perfect habit. Yet it can hardly be compared with Elegantissima in a general way, because it occupies a place by itself and is as distinct from Elegantissima as that variety is from Piersoni—in fact, it bears the same relation to Elegantissima that Scottii does to Bostoniensis. Elegantissima compacta has an ideal habit. The fronds are considerably shorter than those of Elegantissima, and it is a more compact plant. It throws a great many more crowns naturally, making a very bushy, dwarf, compact plant. The difference between the two varieties may be seen at a glance.

Fine, strong plants, 2¼-in. pots, $5.00 per doz., $35.00 per 100; 4-in. pots, $7.50 per doz., $50.00 per 100; 6-in. pans, $1.50 each; 8-in. pans, $3.00 each.

We make a specialty of all kinds of Nephrolepis, carrying a large stock of all sizes at all times—Piersoni, Elegantissima, Superbissima, Bostoniensis, Scottii, Whitmani, Amerpohlii, etc.

Important Announcement to Carnation Growers

At the earnest solicitation of a large number of commercial and private growers, the Cottage Gardens Company has decided to disseminate this year the two famous Carnations

MRS. C. W. WARD and ALMA WARD

two varieties which are well known to all the leading growers of the country. 4 years' test in the New York market has demonstrated their popularity and good staying qualities. For the past three years we have been growing from 15,000 to 25,000 of each, during which time they have always commanded the highest market prices, and at no time has the supply been equal to the demand.

On the exhibition table they have taken the highest honors, and we believe it is safe to say these two carnations stand without an equal.

INVITATION

We extend a cordial invitation to all those interested to visit our establishment, where they will have an opportunity to see them growing and compare their good points with other standard varieties grown under the same conditions.

MRS. C. W. WARD

MRS. C. W. WARD is a perfectly formed flower with full center; color, deep pink, several shades lighter than Lawson, deeper than Winsor; having strong, erect stems 24 to 36 inches in length. A vigorous, healthy grower and has never shown disease of any kind.

A very early and free bloomer, producing fine flowers as early as September 1st, which bring from 25 to 50 per cent more than any other variety on the market.

The keeping qualities of this variety are remarkable. Several shipments of blooms sent to Europe reached their destinations in perfect condition, and wherever exhibited it has always been the last to show signs of wilting.

ALMA WARD

This beautiful Carnation is pure white except during dark weather, when it shows delicate splashings of pink similar to the Cattleya Orchid, increasing its popularity.

ALMA WARD is the largest and most fragrant Carnation ever grown, producing perfect flowers, 3½ to 4½ inches in diameter, on strong, erect stems 36 to 42 inches in length.

This most remarkable variety takes the same place among Carnations as the American Beauty Rose among Roses, and has, during the past 4 years, been awarded numerous prizes, including the following:

The Lawson Silver Medal, ... Toronto, 1907
(No Gold Medal having been awarded.)

Shasta

If you keep any record of the blooms you cut you will be able to appreciate the record Shasta has made this season thus far. Planted Aug. 1st, the plants have given us the following average: 1 bloom per plant in late September; 2 blooms per plant in October; nearly 3 blooms per plant in November, and December 1st to 16th, 1 7/18 blooms per plant. Notice the steady cut. It is absolutely a non-cropper and a non-splitter. Scored 89 points A. C. S. convention last January. Come and see it any time.

$12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

MINNEAPOLIS.

The Market.

Christmas, with its hurry and bundles, came and went with the usual inadequacy of time to cover the amount of orders and get out the amount of stock ordered. Dark weather prevailing for about three weeks before made a marked shortage in blooms, but the demand was good, and every house pronounced itself sold out Christmas morning. American Beauties and violets were not to be had at any price; 24-inch Beauties sold at wholesale for $9 per dozen. Azalea, cyclamen and poinsettia plants filled baskets of every variety and size. Primroses were scarce. Cut poinsettias were more plentiful than usual and less expensive.

Various Notes.

R. A. Latham cleaned out his stock of almost every cut flower and plant, and is thoroughly satisfied with the Christmas business.

L. S. Donaldson Co. secured the decoration of the new Hotel Radisson, and following the success of that will decorate for the opening of the Commercial Club rooms on the top floor of the same building.

O. C. Swanson had the decoration for Miss Partridge's wedding, which was a thoroughly Christmas wedding. Tall Christmas trees and cathedral candles with white flowers were used almost entirely throughout the entire scheme of decoration.

James Souden had a busy time and increased his sales by a large amount over last year's. A number of pretty baskets sold readily here.

The Minneapolis Floral Co. cleaned out everything that was ready to go, and had a busy week shipping out plants, and the usual rush for cut flowers at the last minute. The immense stock of poinsettias was cleaned out completely, and business was extremely good this year.

M. E. M.

CHILLICOTHE, O.—C. A. Johnson, of the Chillicothe Floral Co., says Christmas trade was double what it was last year, though he did not have the downtown salesroom as before and handled all the business from the greenhouses. A considerable shipping trade in carnations and roses is done.

LISBON FALLS, ME.—H. W. Blethen, who began business here in the spring of 1906, has added to his houses until he now has over 26,000 square feet of glass, and the whole range is of fine, modern construction. He has a first-class steam heating system and is planning further improvements. He grows both flowers and vegetables.

Sangamo

Brilliant, glistening pink. Winner wherever shown: Chicago, St. Louis and Milwaukee. The greatest bloomer and fastest grower of any. Flowers perfect, stems long and stiff.

Why You Should Grow SANGAMO

1st.—It will give you more blooms in a season than any other variety. The fastest grower we have ever seen. 2nd.—It is the best color of anything in this class, Winsor, Rose-pink Enchantress or any other. 3rd —The blooms are well formed, nicely rounded out in the center, and do not fade. 4th.—The flower stands well above the calyx, making it impossible to split. 5th.—It comes early with long stems that are always stiff, holding the flower gracefully. 6th —The entire stock is clean and healthy. The cuttings root easily and the plants lift from the field and establish themselves without a set-back. 7th.—Not only an exhibition variety, but the best bread and butter Carnation for any florist to grow. Let us pay your coal bill for you.

Rooted cuttings guaranteed. January delivery, 100, $12; 1000, $100.

The Market.

Trade for Christmas was heavy, with a good supply of stock. Roses were quite plentiful and sold well at good prices. Killarney, Maid, Bride and Richmond were in quantity and the quality was good. Beauties were scarce and too high priced to sell well. Carnations were in fine shape and in sufficient quantity to meet the demand. They sold readily at good figures. Red, white and Enchantress took the lead.

Valley sold well and there was enough to go around. Violets sold readily. A fine lot of sweet peas were seen, but they were not plentiful. Paper Whites found a ready sale, as they made the best showing for the money. Cut poinsettias went well at good figures. The demand for greens, such as festooning, smilax and asparagus, was heavy, especially for church decorations. There were also quantities of potted plants used for the churches and they all had nice decorations. Potted plants sold well. Azaleas and poinsettias took the lead and there was a nice lot on hand. Cyclamen, primroses, Lorraine begonias and palms sold well. Plant baskets went rather slowly in this market, compared with other seasons, but there were quite a few disposed of. Taking it as a whole, we considered it a good Christmas.

Various Notes.

The Florists' Club held no regular meeting, as nearly everybody was too busy for Christmas. The club dance was a great success and it has been decided to give another January 18, and they are all looking forward to the time.

E. Metzmaier reports a heavy Christmas trade, both in plants and cut flowers. He also handled a large number of trees.

The Munk Floral Co. had a nice lot of stock for Christmas week and reports heavy business.

The Fifth Avenue Floral Co. had a heavier cut of carnations for Christmas week than for any week since the season opened.

The River Side Garden was kept busy supplying wreathing, etc., and trade in general was heavy. J. M.

Broadalbin, N. Y.—W. K. Smith, who has about 10,000 feet of glass, has heretofore used all his space for lettuce and radishes, for which he finds an excellent sale in the cities of Gloversville and Johnstown. Now, however, he has decided to handle flowers also, and he already is stocking one small house with bulbs and plants. Next summer he will build another greenhouse, 30x100 feet.

FLORIST PETUNIAS

Every florist having a design trade has felt the difficulty of getting suitable flowers for the work during hot weather, when roses and carnations are barely presentable. After years of selection we have found three varieties of Double Petunias, No. 1, Pure White; No. 2, Clear Shining Pink; No. 3, Pure Lavender, which have made us more money for the labor expended than anything we have ever handled. The flowers are large, 4¼ to 6 inches in diameter, and as a keeper during hot weather beats anything we have ever tried, while the enormous quantity of blooms they produce makes the cost practically nothing. We find indoor culture suits them best. Price, 2-inch pot plants, $1.50 per doz.; one dozen of each of the three varieties for $4.00.

CANNAS AND GERANIUMS

We have as good a list of Cannas for florists' use as can be found; strong 2 and 3-eye divisions. Northern grown Cannas, divided from the clumps just before shipping, are far superior to stock shipped from the South. We firmly believe that Cannas divided early, packed in thin boxes and stored for weeks or months have lost much of their vitality before the grower gets them.

Beaute Poitevine, Crimson Bedder, Duke of Marlborough, Alphonse Bouvier, Egandale, Robert Christie, Florence Vaughan, Burbank, Papa Nardy, $2.50 per 100; $20.00 per 1000.

King Humbert, $5.00 per 100.

(Many other varieties, but the above are a few leaders.)

GERANIUMS—Let us have your order for Geraniums for immediate shipment, or to reserve until you want them. Standard varieties, like S. A. Nutt, Mme. Barney, John Doyle, Alphonse Ricard, Beaute Poitevine, Mme. Landry, Berthe de Presilly, Marvel and La Favorite, $25.00 per 1000, for strong 2¼-in. pot plants.

Selections of 1000, in named varieties, our choice, all good sorts, $20.00 per 1000. Tell us how many varieties you wish; can send 50 if you want that many.

Horticultural Books

We can supply any of the following books at the prices noted, postpaid, and any other book at publishers' price:

Pronouncing Dictionary.

A list of plant names and the botanical terms most frequently met with in articles on trade topics, with the correct pronunciation for each. 25 cents

Hardy Perennials and Old-fashioned Garden Flowers.

By J. Wood. Describing the most desirable plants for borders, shrubberies, etc., foliage and flowering. Illustrated. $2.00

The American Carnation.

By C. W. Ward. Invaluable to the carnation grower. All departments of the business are treated in a thoroughly practical manner. This book is the work of a careful, studious grower of ripe experience. Fully illustrated. $3.50

Tomato Culture.

By W. W. Tracy, U. S. Dept. of Agriculture. The book deals with every phase of tomato culture and was written for the man who wants the latest and most complete information on the subject. Cloth. 150 pages. Illustrated. 50 cents

Ornamental Gardening for Americans.

By Elias A. Long, landscape architect. A treatise on beautifying homes, rural districts and cemeteries. A plain and practical work, with numerous illustrations and instructions so plain that they may be readily followed. Illustrated. Cloth. 390 pages. $1.50

The Forcing Book.

By L. H. Bailey. In this work the author has compiled in handy form the cream of all the available information on the subject of forcing vegetables under glass. In addition to this, the experience of many practical growers in different localities is furnished. $1.25

Bulbs and Tuberous Rooted Plants.

By C. L. Allen. A complete history, description, methods of propagation and full directions for the successful culture of bulbs in the garden, dwelling or greenhouse. The illustrations which embellish this work have been drawn from nature, and have been engraved especially for this book. Cloth. $1.50

The Pruning Book.

By L. H. Bailey. This is the first American work exclusively devoted to pruning. It differs from most other treatises on this subject in that the author takes particular pains to explain the principles of each operation in every detail. Specific advice is given on the pruning of the various kinds of fruits and ornamental trees, shrubs and hedges. Considerable space is devoted to the pruning and training of grape vines, both American and foreign. 530 pages. Illustrated. $1.50

Insects and Insecticides.

By Clarence M. Weed, D. Sc. A practical manual concerning noxious insects and the methods of preventing their injuries. Profusely illustrated. A generally useful handbook on noxious insects. It covers the whole field of insect pests very thoroughly and is especially valuable for its complete and up-to-date methods of fighting insects. The work is intensely practical. All the important insect pests are described and remedies for them, and methods of preventing their injuries described in detail. Cloth. $1.50

INDIANAPOLIS.

The Market.

We have just passed through one of the most successful Christmases that we have had in years. The weather conditions were ideal up to Christmas eve, when there was a fall of about seven inches of snow, followed by a cold wave, which made delivering a hardship and, no doubt, cut in on the Christmas morning's sales. However, we have no right to complain, as this was by far the best Christmas that we have had in years. Preceding and following Christmas there were a number of debutante parties, calling for numerous decorations and no end of flowers as gifts.

As a rule, stock was plentiful and brought good prices; roses retailing at from $3 to $6 per dozen; carnations, $1.50 to $2, and American Beauties, $18 to $24. Most of the violets were the eastern stock and brought $4 per hundred. Poinsettias, valley, orchids, hyacinths and Paper Whites were in good supply and sold well. In pot plants, azaleas had the call, with cyclamen next. A great many good Lorraine were to be had, but they are becoming less popular each year. Primulas were in abundance and sold well. A number of florists experienced considerable trouble in their stock not arriving on account of the railroads being tied up by the heavy fall of snow.

Various Notes.

A. F. J. Baur spent Christmas at Richmond with relatives.

John Rieman and A. Wiegand & Sons have added new wagons to their equipments.

Hans Kipke, of A. Wiegand & Sons, went to Chicago to attend a dance Christmas night. His train got tied up in the snow storm and he did not get there until the next day, spending twenty-four hours on the way. H. L. W.

LIMA, O.—The greenhouses of E. N. Zetlitz were damaged by fire on the night of December 20. The immediate loss by fire, water and frost was estimated at $2,000, but the misfortune was rendered more serious by the fact that it occurred at the height of the holiday demand. The fire started in the boiler room and was confined to the rear part of the buildings.

Greenhouse Heating.

GAS OR COAL.

Can you, or some of the readers of the Review, tell me the relative value of natural gas at 4 cents per thousand cubic feet for heating greenhouses, compared with soft coal at $2 per ton? I am contemplating building a wholesale plant and any information will be appreciated.

J. W. D.

The natural gas would be found far more economical than soft coal at the prices mentioned, especially as there would be a large saving in the care of the heating plant.

HEAT FOR VEGETABLE HOUSE.

We have a house 14x60, eight feet to the ridge and five feet to the eaves, with two feet of boards in the sides, lined, and three feet of glass. The ends are glass, except two feet at the bottom, which is boarded and lined. We intend to grow vegetables in beds on the ground. Please let us know how many lines of pipe will be required to heat this house to 45 degrees. We wish to use 2-inch pipes, hanging them on the posts along the sides of the house. Our temperature here, in northern Maryland, rarely goes below 10 degrees above zero.

R. H. L.

To heat the house described to 45 degrees, about 300 square feet of radiation will be required, but it will be well to have a boiler with a rating of 450 square feet. For radiating surface, a simple method will be to run one 2½-inch flow and three 2-inch returns on each wall. Or, if it is desired to use nothing but 2-inch pipe, it will answer if two flows and six returns are used in the house.

PIPING IN WESTERN NEW YORK.

Kindly tell me what is the cheapest and most efficient way to heat one house with hot water. A temperature of 56 degrees is wanted, in an outside temperature of 15 degrees below zero. The house is 32x200 feet, fifteen feet to the ridge and four and one-half feet to the eaves. It is a separate house, with a 2-foot cement wall and two and one-half feet of glass in the side walls, which are solid and eight inches thick. The east gable is protected by a connecting house; the west gable is not protected. The land has a fall of about two feet from west to east, toward the boiler, and the boiler is placed in a cellar seven feet deep. The main flow and main return must travel about thirty-five feet through a connecting house; this is the distance from the boiler to the center of the house in question.

I wish to use 2-inch pipes. Please state how many are needed. Where should be the highest point of the flows, at the farther end of the house or near the boiler? A 100-gallon expansion tank stands fifteen or sixteen feet above the top of the boiler. I have a large Kroeschell generator.

A. J. P.

To heat a house 32x200 feet to 56 degrees in weather 15 degrees below zero will require about 3,000 square feet of radiation. To furnish this, using 2-inch pipes, it will be necessary to put in twenty-four, of which one-half should be flows. It will simplify matters, however, if eight 2½-inch flows and fourteen 2-inch returns are used. If a large heater is used, it would answer if there are only seven 2½-inch flow pipes.

When the houses are so located that it is feasible to give the flow pipes a slight fall, it is possible to connect the expansion tank with the highest point in the flows, which will be at the end nearest the heater, and this is recommended in the present case. If this cannot be done, it will be necessary to place an air valve at the highest point in the flows. To connect the boiler with the piping in the houses, it will be well to use two 4-inch flow pipes and the same for the returns.

THE HIGHEST POINT.

In the matter of heating with hot water, I have always supposed and been taught to believe that the highest point and expansion tank should be at farthest point from the boilers. I now see in the catalogue of a prominent firm in that line a statement that the highest point should be over the boiler. Will you please give me the facts in the case?

J. J. T.

It is always advisable to have the highest point in a hot water heating system at the end of the house nearest the boiler. While it will make little difference in cases where the return pipes are several feet above the top of the heater, the advantages of this method of piping are quite marked when the return pipes are on a level with, or below the top of the boiler.

The circulation in a hot water system is due to the unequal weight of the water in the opposing columns. One of these contains the water from the bottom of the boiler to the highest point in the system, in what we may call the flow or warm side, while the other is filled with the water between the highest point and the heater in what may be considered the return, or cooling portion of the system. The closer the highest point is to the heater, the warmer the water will be, as it will have had less opportunity to cool off; hence, since the weight of water lessens as the temperature increases, and increases as the temperature becomes less, the shortening of the distance between the heater and the highest point in the system tends to increase the difference in the weight of the water in the flow and return systems and hence to hasten the circulation.

The circulation of the water in a hot

Metallic Thermometer "A"

SIZE—8 inches high, 4 inches wide, 2 inches deep. Case made of cast aluminum, highly finished.

This little instrument is an accurate, fully tested thermometer showing the correct temperature at all times, and combines a device which will ring a bell at your bedside when the greenhouse gets either too hot or too cold.

The florist needs protection against the overheating of his greenhouses as well as a protection against cold, for which we can highly recommend our type "A." This device serves both purposes, and at the same time indicates, as previously stated, the actual temperature in his greenhouse.

We guarantee that actual results will at all times be obtained. This device has been subjected to the severest tests in our laboratory, for over two years, and at the same time has given entire satisfaction, under all conditions, to many users in the trade.

All you have to do is to set the pointers at the highest and lowest temperatures you want, and the thermometer will do the rest. It will ring a good, loud bell when either point is reached.

This device saves all worry over trouble from sudden temperature changes.

Investigate it today.

The "National" Differential Temperature Alarm

SIZE—4 inches in diameter, 1⅛ inch deep. Casing made of Sheet Aluminum.

A sudden cold snap, or a rapid thaw, may mean hundreds of dollars' loss because your greenhouse gets too hot or too cold before you realize the sudden change that has occurred.

Protect yourself from such danger

Our Differential Temperature Alarm is specially designed for florists' use and is guaranteed to give absolute protection from the dangers before stated. Set the pointers at the highest and lowest temperatures desired and this device will positively ring a bell at your bedside when either point is reached.

Over 2,000 of these instruments are now giving complete satisfaction to florists throughout the country.

It is constructed of the very best material available for the purpose, and contains no complicated mechanism; hence serves its purpose a lifetime.

The pointers on face of instrument can be set so as to allow a difference between a possible increase or decrease of temperature of only two degrees. All that is necessary is to change position of pointers by loosening set screw in center so as to set the pointers or hands on face of dial; then tighten said set screw.

We also manufacture separate instruments; No. 1, to ring a bell when the house gets too hot; No. 2, to ring a bell when the house gets too cold. Of course, the most useful is the instrument illustrated above, which is a combination of both No. 1 and No. 2.

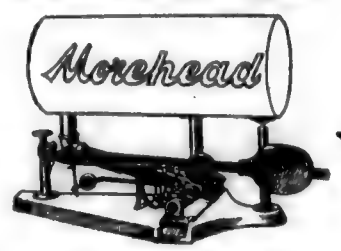
water system is not unlike the turning of a wheel weighted upon one side, the heavier side tending to seek the lowest point, and in doing this the other side is carried to the top. In a hot water heating system the cooling of the water acts as a weight, on one side, while the water heated in the boiler, on the other, is considerably lighter and is pushed up into the flow pipes by the heavier water in the returns.

For a more complete discussion of the question, our inquirer is referred to the chapter on heating, in "Greenhouse Construction," by L. R. Taft, which is sent postpaid by the Review for $1.50.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

The Market.



Christmas in this city was green up to the closing hours of the day, when the first snow blizzard of the winter began and continued intermittently during the night and all day Sunday. In consequence of the moderate weather, the florists all did a record business. With them it was certainly a green Christmas, for never was there so much holly, boxwood and other greens sold here. Good prices obtained, yet within the means of everyone, with the result that everyone bought.

Potted plants showed increased popularity and poinsettias, cyclamen, primroses, azaleas, ardisias and oranges found ready sale, at prices that netted substantial profits. Palms and ferns sold to some extent, but not to compare with the flowering plants. There was an advance of about one-third over normal prices on cut flowers and the supply and demand about balanced. Richmond roses took a big jump in demand and dealers found it almost impossible to keep any on hand, while Beacon carnations led all others. A number of large funerals, the orders for which were well distributed, also put the trade to a test at this season.

Club Meeting.

The first monthly meeting of the Rhode Island Florists' and Gardeners' Club, under its newly elected officers, was held in its hall, 98 Westminster street, Monday evening, December 19, with President Robert Johnston in the chair, and an unusually good attendance, in view of the holiday season. H. Howard Pepper, of Providence, was admitted to membership. The meeting was necessarily a short one, as many of the members were anxious to get away, so the usual discussion and question box were omitted. It was decided to hold the annual supper of the club at Brucker's hotel on some evening in January, to be decided upon later, and a committee, consisting of Eugene Appleton, Alexander Macrae and Harry Clark, was appointed to make the necessary arrangements.

DETROIT.

The Market.

Tired, but happy, are the Detroit florists. Everyone expected to do a big business, but it far exceeded all expectations. A good feature about business this year was that buying was commenced earlier; not that many orders were placed the week before, but along about Monday of Christmas week business opened up nicely. Medium-priced plants were in best demand. Poinsettias, begonias, primroses, acacias, ericas and azaleas seemed most popular and Boston ferns were also in big demand. Many cyclamens were sold, but the call for these did not equal that of other plants.

The market was almost glutted with carnations of only medium quality on Christmas day, and many went to waste. It is to be hoped that this will serve as a lesson to those growers who still insist on pickling carnations. A week before Christmas it was almost impossible to get any carnations in this market, most growers claiming to be off crop, while in reality they were piling them up for the holidays.

The demand for holly wreaths was unusually heavy this year, and Christmas trees were worth their weight in gold Christmas eve. Last year many dealers lost money on trees; consequently, this year the supply was not nearly equal to the much increased demand.

Various Notes.

Christmas came pretty close to being a sad one for J. P. Kayl, as a section of his boiler burst Christmas eve. After spending most of the night standing waist deep in water, Mr. Kayl managed to get the leak stopped before any damage was done.

The local express companies were swamped with Christmas goods, and many of the florists suffered on this account. A shipment of orchids for E. A. Fetters came through frozen stiff. A shipment of 5,000 violets for B. Schroeter came through a day too late.

The Michigan Cut Flower Exchange handled a fine lot of roses for Christmas and filled all orders most satisfactorily.

HUGO SCHROETER.

ALLENTOWN, PA.—John P. Mederna h celebrated his eightieth birthday December 18. He is employed by the Lehigh Valley railroad as the florist at its Gordon street depot, and his garden is so rare a sight that many people come from a distance in spring and summer to visit it.

A PERFECT GREENHOUSE HOSE

FURNISHED in continuous lengths of 500 feet. An exceptionally high grade hose manufactured with a woven jacket insertion instead of cotton duck, and with specially selected rubber in the inner tube and cover.

The woven jacket construction makes a stronger hose than can be obtained from cotton duck, and absolutely precludes the possibility of cover opening at seam—a common cause of failure of hose made on cotton duck. This construction also gives a more flexible hose and reduces the possibility of kinking.

"Magic" Hose is guaranteed to stand a pressure of 500 pounds per square inch, although its bursting pressure is far in excess of this.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

The day after Christmas brought good reports from all who could be seen. Trade generally was quite satisfactory and up to all expectations, although it looks as if the plant trade had been greatly increased at the expense of the cut flower trade.

There never was a finer lot of plants shown in this city. In blooming plants azaleas, begonias, cyclamens and primulas were largely in evidence. There were poinsettias in 3-inch pots up to 12-inch pans, thousands of them. For once, there was no scarcity of red for Christmas. These, with ardisias, ferns, etc., were arranged in beautiful baskets, which could be bought for $1.50 to $25 each, and one peculiarity about the business was that there was no effort to get exorbitant prices for plants, while cut flowers were kept well up.

Though I have heard no complaint, Begonia Lorraine seems to have got a black eye, for wherever anything was left they seemed to be the most in evidence and looked the worst for the wear.

The weather was pretty cold for delivering and everything had to be well wrapped.

Cut flowers met with about the usual demand and everything was good. The day of pickled stock seems to be a thing of the past in this city, and it is well. Most of the growers about here have learned their lesson, and in some cases the experience came high. No one wants pickled stock at any price.

Violets, which should have arrived at 7 a. m. on the morning of December 24, did not arrive until 5 p. m. and had a close shave, as many of the retailers hesitated to book orders, for fear the stock would not get in, and there was none for immediate delivery. They all moved, however.

One thing commented on by some of the wholesalers was that after the Thursday night delivery the trade, as far as the wholesalers were concerned, stopped.

Beauties were not sought after to any great extent, and it was a case of push with both the wholesaler and retailer. However, on the whole, it was a highly satisfactory Christmas from the cut flower men's point of view.

The green goods people did fairly well. There was not a great deal of good holly, but plenty that was not really good. Christmas trees were a drug on the market, and I understand that there are still cars that have not been unloaded. Last year there was a shortage.

Various Notes.

Mrs. E. A. Williams turned out one of the finest delivery autos in the city on Monday, December 20, which did good service in the Christmas deliveries.

J. W. Elliott's auto was in a collision last Friday. While all were badly shaken up, Mrs. Elliott was the only one seriously injured. She was taken to the hospital, but it is thought she was suffering more from the shock than from her injuries, and that she will soon be better.

John Bader has just unloaded a car of French lilac for forcing. He reports this as his best Christmas for plants.

Hoo-Hoo.

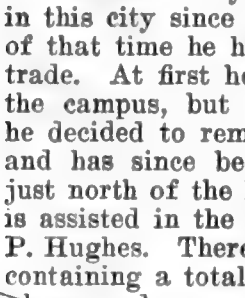
Florists' Review

When Writing Advertisers



HILLSDALE, MICH.

The youngest concern in the florists' trade in this city is named the Bushong Gardens, and has greenhouses on Lewis street, in the west part of the city. On account of sickness in Mr. Bushong's family, the greenhouses have not been looked after much this winter, but in February they will be fully stocked up. Mr. Bushong makes a specialty of outdoor plants.

J. H. Ellis has been a resident of this city for nearly forty years, and for over a quarter of a century he has conducted a greenhouse on West street, near the new high school building. In his earlier years he was connected with the New York Associated Press. He arrived in Hillsdale in 1871 and went into the shoe business. His principal reason for turning to the florists' trade was the hope that he might thus benefit his health, which has been feeble for many years.

Wellington Hughes, the proprietor of the Hillsdale City Greenhouses, has lived in this city since 1869, and during most of that time he has been in the florists' trade. At first he located over north of the campus, but about eight years ago he decided to remove nearer to the town and has since been on Hillsdale street, just north of the Lake Shore tracks. He is assisted in the business by his son, C. P. Hughes. There are three greenhouses, containing a total of about 5,000 feet of glass, and a general stock is grown. Some of the Easter lilies look especially promising.

One of the best constructed and best conducted greenhouse ranges in southern Michigan is that of Carl Hirsch, in this city. Mr. Hirsch is not only proprietor of the Hillsdale Floral Park, but also the landscape gardener for the Lake Shore railroad, having charge of all the railroad's gardens between Chicago and Toledo. He removed to Hillsdale fifteen years ago and has been in the business here for fourteen years. At first he had merely one house; today there are eight houses, covering an area of 30,000 square feet. Six of the houses are given over to carnations, one to chrysanthemums, one to roses, and one to palms and ferns. Mr. Hirsch furnishes all of the plants for the gardens of the Lake Shore in his territory; this means about 20,000 a year. Just outside of the city limits he has a farm, or nursery, whence he gets the shrubbery for the Lake Shore. He has just completed the remodeling of his greenhouses, using cement and iron as much as possible in the construction. The foundations, sidewalks and benches are nearly all of cement. The office is an attractive place, with a rustic fountain and a fish pond. Mr. Hirsch has been in the flower and landscape gardening work for thirty years, having learned in Germany, the land of his birth. His father, Carl Hirsch, Sr., assists him in the work for the Lake Shore.

DO YOUR PLANTS AND FLOWERS EAT ENOUGH?
DO YOU GET A TOP PRICE MARKET?

Grain fed sheep manure is Nature's fertilizer, possessing in excess those elements necessary for hardy plant life in readily available form. The large percentage of humus also makes available dormant elements in the soil.

By special process the raw material from covered pens only is dried, ground, weed seeds destroyed and packed in 100 lb. bags.

Sheep's Head brand trade-mark guarantees it to be unadulterated, reliable, safe, quick acting and a perfect plant food for plants of all kinds.

You Can't Get Around This Eave Plate of Ours

That is to say, you can talk the "good-enough-for-me" argument in favor of the wooden plate and toe-nailed roof bars, until both of us are black in the face, but when you get right down to facts and figures, you know well enough that this Ice Clearing Eave Plate of ours, with Sash Bar Clasps attached, is the only absolutely rigid, enduring eave.

You also admit, that because all holes are drilled, all spacing of the sash bar clasps done at the factory before shipment, that it can be put up in half the time the wooden plate takes.

It is a plate that not only lasts, but makes a house of greatly increased light. We sell it separately, by the foot, with sash bar clasps attached, if you want to buy it that way.

Look it up in the Handy Hand Book, and while you are about it, get to know our Semi-Iron or Pipe Frame House, and the leader of them all, our Sectional Iron Frame.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

A WOODMEN'S WREATH.

Hillary E. Le Page, of Stamford, Conn., recently was called upon to make an unusual design for the funeral of a member of the order known as the Woodmen of the World. The piece was a plateau mounted on an easel and was of unusually large size, but the special feature was that the customer required that a small log of wood be displayed in the center of the plateau, as shown in the accompanying illustration. The piece itself was made of white carnations as a base for the block of wood and as a background for the lettering. The rest of the design was of roses, daisies and asparagus. Mr. Le Page's execution of his order pleased his customer greatly.

COLOR LIFE.

Bright Touches in Designs.

No small amount of the value of life is its warmth, and this is emphatically true with regard to life of color. Why is pink so much more of a favorite than lavender or blue? It possesses warmth and fire. Blue is not becoming to a pale face. It is happily used with a clear, light rosy color, or a rich, subdued rosy color. Pink or red imparts color to an otherwise color-poor complexion. The warm shades and tints of color seem to impart light, and the dull, cold colors selfishly absorb it. Lavender alone is apt to appear dull and cold. It takes a strong artistic instinct to discover its value.

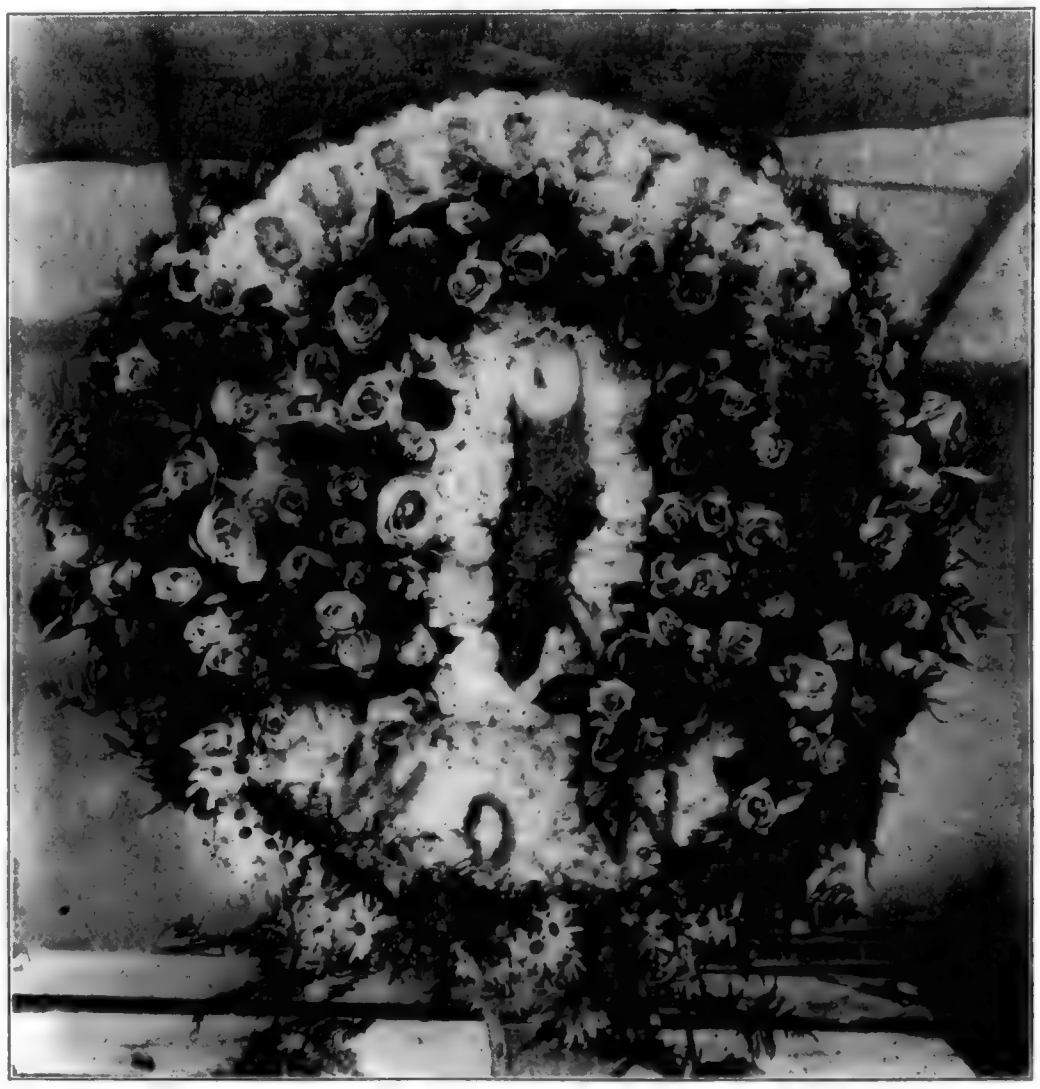
Cold pictures do not attract a large number of admirers. A sunset of violet and green after a cold rain in winter will not draw the eye like the glow of the orange-pink, or crimson with violet, of the opening spring.

Of themselves, there are not many more cold colors in nature than there are pure colors. The most of them have touches of some warm color, like pink, yellow or red, in markings on the flower proper, on the stamens or pistils, or on the foliage or stems. It is wonderful what transformations these slender lines of warm color will produce on a flower.

A Little Dash of Color.

Here is a clue to what may be accomplished by a mere penciling in a group of flowers, which is, properly speaking, a design: A piece may be made of lavender, say sweet peas or asters, or lavender and white, and appear dainty and ethereal, but some way it is never so attractive as if there were ever so small an addition of a crimson pink, unless you find in the first place that your white is decidedly creamy or yellow, in which case the warmth lies in the yellow. An all lavender piece fairly leaps into a resurrection by the introduction of a darker purple or a rose-pink streak. A dull copper which shows a subdued orange is as good as a hot water plant to a cold blue.

To better appreciate the powerful effect of a trace of pink with lavender, make this comparison: A piece made of soft, rose-tinted hyacinths may with all propriety be touched with a bunch of light violet, without materially changing the aspect of the design. People will pass it by with some commonplace remark. But make this same piece of lavender hyacinths and touch it with a nice bit of rose-pink, and while in the former case the lavender is but a dot on the pink, the pink on the lavender permeates the whole group with the magic of the sunlight which it carries. Even with the combination of white and lavender, sneak in some pink, although it must be administered in homeopathic doses. Sometimes the right thing can be introduced in a tie or the part of the tie.



Using Skill and Saving Stock.

If you want showy pieces, aim at this iridescence in coloring, rather than size of piece and quantity of flowers. Thus you conserve your stock, and you make skill count, which is the highest type of work. Of course, we can not accomplish such things as are hinted at in the examples to be mentioned next, showing marvelous results in reflection and blending of colors, but in decorative work lights can be rearranged with regard to location, shading and degree of brilliancy, so as to at least suggest the color effects on the plumage of the proud gobbler or the turkey hen, the teal duck or even a common chicken. Similar blending of rainbow coloring is to be seen in many fishes.

China painters who know their art will always work in some warm dashes of brown, which contains yellow, or a little red, or some pink, which is diluted red, on the turn of a leaf or in the cloudy spaces of the background. Laying aside the sentiment attached to all white in a bride's bouquet, a suggestion of a delicate, warm tint is just such an addition to an armful or shower. A Golden Gate or Uncle John rose somewhere among the Bride roses, or a pale Bridesmaid bud, does not appear accidentally in a well arranged bouquet. At the same time, we have reached the stage where color for funeral work seems to be welcomed, instead of a pall of all white, as it used to be.

The Warm Reds and Yellows.

The richness and attractiveness of the reds which approach the pure reds is due to their warmth of color, just as warm-hearted people are general favorites, rather than cold-hearted, retiring people. Purples are attractive in proportion as they exhibit more red and less blue. Yellow with white is excellent coloring, because of the diffusion of the warmth of the yellow over the delicacy of the white, and the union is more nearly perfect if the white be a yellow white rather than a blue or a violet white; not that the union of blue or violet is not harmonious with yellow, but that the tints of yellow and yellow white have the common yellow color.

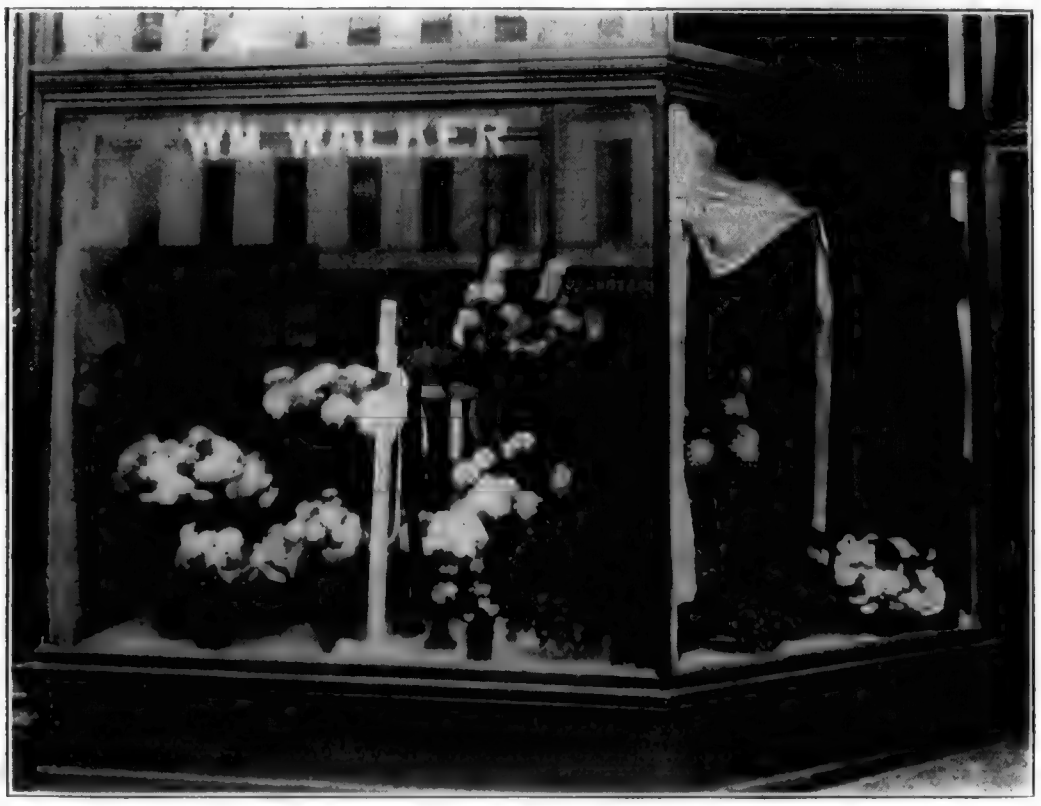
While everybody admires autumn leaves on account of their brilliancy of color, they unconsciously rest their eyes on the rich, warm reds and yellows in the chill of the oncoming winter. Greens in which yellow predominates over the blue are much more restful and soothing to the color sense than the greens in which the blue overmasters the yellow. Blue is always cool, even in the summer sky, not to mention being cold, as in the stormy winter sky. Green is always cool, but not decidedly cold, on account of the element of yellow in its composition.

Important Distinctions in Colors.



We may conclude, then, that the reds and yellows are the warm colors, while the greens and most blues are cool colors, and violet is cold. This statement must be taken as referring to these colors when they most nearly approach the pure type. As they are mixed with colors of the opposite trait as regards color life, they are toned down or up to approach the opposite condition. For example, a pure, warm red, which is quite well typified in the Roosevelt carnation, could be made much colder and less attractive by the introduction of blue. The result would be a dull purple that nobody cares for. Or, to illustrate the other part of the statement, a dark, richly colored violet will sell much more quickly than a puny light blue one, which lacks so much of the warm red element, for purple or violet is made by combining red and blue.

Any intense color loses its tone and quality to the eye after steady looking in a strong light. How often, when work requires one to look constantly on the one color of a Beacon or Craig carnation, it will become mud color to the tired optic nerve! Look at something else for a while and the color will return at the first glance. Therefore, in decorating do not mass an intense color in large, unbroken groups under a strong light. Break up the mass by atmospheric spaces, or add foliage, its own if possible, or subdue the light.

Gertrude Blair.

WALKER'S WINDOW.

William Walker, of Louisville, Ky., has great confidence in window displays as effective local advertisements, and as a proof of the sincerity of his opinion he has sent the photograph which is here reproduced—a photograph taken just before Thanksgiving, when the window was decorated in honor of a football game.

Window of Wm. Walker, Louisville, Ky.

It is obvious, however, that this photograph does not do justice to the original. In presenting a view of flowers or floral decorations, ordinary photography is always inadequate, of course, and in this case the picture was further marred by some of the neighboring buildings, which persisted in "casting reflections." In spite of all this, the window display bears evidence of being artistic, and it was much admired by passers-by, many of whom stepped into the store just to express their enthusiastic approval. The football and the goal had their conspicuous places in the arrangement, and the colors of both sides in the game were well worked out with flowers and ribbon.

Mr. Walker grows his own stock and grows it well, in spite of the fact that he is inside the city limits and must contend with a smoky atmosphere and other disadvantages. Besides his mums and carnations, he also grows his own roses, with the exception of the Beauties. He thinks Golden Gate is a great rose for one who sells his own product.

Mr. Walker adds that while he feels that he has done well for a city establishment, yet the call of the country and more room is sounding pretty loudly in his ears, and doubtless before long he will have to answer the call and build up a new, up-to-date plant, away from city smoke and taxes.

BOATWRIGHT'S JAPANESE BOOTH

At the recent Georgia-Carolina Fair, which was held in Augusta, Ga., and was opened by President Taft, a splendid record was made by Boatwright's Floral Co., of North Augusta, S. C. This firm made twenty entries for exhibits and won nearly as many blue ribbons.

The fair, as a whole, was the best ever held there. It was a success from start to finish, and was attended every day by large crowds.

The exhibit of Boatwright's Floral Co. represented a Japanese tea room, and the young ladies who acted as attendants wore Japanese costumes, as the illustration shows. The staging of the flowers and the arrangement of the booth were wholly the work of the firm's designer, Mrs. Boatwright.

The Boatwrights are using rustic work this year for pot covers, pedestals, and in every way, in fact, in which they can use it advantageously. It will be noticed, on examining the picture, that all the plants in the exhibit were displayed in rustic pot covers. The centerpiece on the table was an original piece, made to hold seventeen Kift's glasses.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS

CHADWICK A KEEPER.

November 20 I cut a vase of Golden Chadwick mums for one of our churches. I saw these flowers again at Christmas time, December 23, and not only were they still in good condition, apparently as though first cut, but actually showed up better than any mums I saw in the market at Christmas time, though we had Nonin and J. Rosette in the finest possible shape.

I should like to have the opinion of other readers of the REVIEW on this point. Is durability a recognized quality of Chadwick, or is it probable that its behavior, in the case I have related, was simply the result of some accidental circumstance? W. J. OLDS.

GOOD COMMERCIAL VARIETIES.

Kindly advise me as to what you consider the best commercial varieties of chrysanthemums, early, midseason and late, in the colors, white, pink and yellow. F. H. W.

The following list, while it may not be the best in cultivation with everyone, was highly satisfactory with me, and F. H. W. could go farther and fare worse:

Early white, October Frost; early pink, Pacific Supreme; early yellow, Golden Glow.

Midseason white, Beatrice May; midseason pink, O. H. Broomhead; midseason yellow, Yellow Miller.

Late white, Chadwick or Mrs. Swinburne; late pink, W. R. Brock; late yellow, Nagoya.

October Frost must be taken on the early bud to get the best results and Beatrice May needs careful handling, but the balance of the list offers no serious obstacle to successful culture, handled in just the same way as the average commercial grower would handle them. Chadwick is not an absolutely pure white, although it is good and reliable. Swinburne in some sections is much the better flower. CHAS. H. TOTTY.

NITRATE OF POTASH FOR MUMS.

Though living in New Zealand, I depend largely on the REVIEW for my horticultural information, and I noticed that Chas. H. Totty, in a recent issue of the paper, mentioned the use of nitrate of potash—saltpeter, I believe—as a fertilizer for chrysanthemums. I should like to know more about this, as I grow them. How much of the fertilizer is used to a gallon of water? When should I start using it, and how long should I continue? J. H. R.

Nitrate of potash is a valuable, quick-acting fertilizer for chrysanthemums. It is the saltpeter of commerce and, as I understand it, is produced by boiling down the muriate of potash and nitrate of soda together. When used in conjunction with bone meal, which supplies the phosphoric acid, it makes a complete fertilizer, supplying both nitrogen and potash.

A safe proportion to use is one ounce to a 4-gallon can of water. We have used it constantly at the rate of one pound to a 50-gallon barrel of water. As to how often to use it, the operator must be governed by the condition of the plants. When the plants are accustomed to its use, they can be fed with it at every other watering, and it can be used right up until the bud shows color. The time to start applying this fertilizer is when the plants are well established, which is about eight to ten weeks after being planted in their flowering quarters.

J. H. R., living in New Zealand, probably grows his plants outside, as is done in Australia. In this section of the United States, which is, of course, the antipodes to New Zealand, we plant out on the benches in May and then commence feeding the plants at the end of July. He must govern himself according to his own season, concerning which he knows much more than I do.

CHAS. H. TOTTY.

IRIS FROM SEED.

Can Spanish and English iris be grown successfully from seed in this country, and if so, will they bloom the second year from seed? H. H. G.

Both Spanish and English iris can be raised from seed, but they will not flower before the third year. We do not know of any successful attempt being made to raise them in this way in America. The low price at which they are purchasable in Europe would tend to discourage the raising of home seedlings. Seed, when ripe, should be sown in flats of sandy loam and kept in a coldframe or cool greenhouse. It will not germinate until the following spring. The simplest method of propagation for these irises is by bulb offsets, which are freely produced. C. W.

TIME TO START CANNAS.

When should cannas be started to make good, salable plants in spring? R. F.

It is too early to start cannas. Examine them to see if any show signs of decaying. The end of February or first half of March is quite as early as they need to be started. Seasonable cultural notes on these will appear in the REVIEW later in the season from time to time.

PFEIFFER'S HOUNDS.

There is a sentiment about a pack of good dogs that appeals even to those who never by any chance will come in touch with rural life or hunting, and in the accompanying illustration of the hounds of Charles Pfeiffer a special interest attaches from the fact that the dogs play an important part in the care of their owner's carnation plants. Located at Fort Thomas, Ky., Mr. Pfeiffer finds that the rabbits with which the neighborhood abounds consider the young carnation plants a most toothsome delicacy; in fact, so fond of the carnation is bunny that it would be next to impossible to grow the plants in the field were it not for the services of the hounds. All summer long the dogs act as guards over the carnations, keeping the rabbits away. In the winter Mr. Pfeiffer and his friends employ the hounds for hunting, and many a florist has enjoyed their work.

Chas. Pfeiffer's Hounds, Bred in Old Kentucky.

While everybody admires autumn leaves on account of their brilliancy of color, they unconsciously rest their eyes on the rich, warm reds and yellows in the chill of the oncoming winter. Greens in which yellow predominates over the blue are much more restful and soothing to the color sense than the greens in which the blue overmasters the yellow. Blue is always cool, even in the summer sky, not to mention being cold, as in the stormy winter sky. Green is always cool, but not decidedly cold, on account of the element of yellow in its composition.

Important Distinctions in Colors.

We may conclude, then, that the reds and yellows are the warm colors, while the greens and most blues are cool colors, and violet is cold. This statement must be taken as referring to these colors when they most nearly approach the pure type. As they are mixed with colors of the opposite trait as regards color life, they are toned down or up to approach the opposite condition. For example, a pure, warm red, which is quite well typified in the Roosevelt carnation, could be made much colder and less attractive by the introduction of blue. The result would be a dull purple that nobody cares for. Or, to illustrate the other part of the statement, a dark, richly colored violet will sell much more quickly than a puny light blue one, which lacks so much of the warm red element, for purple or violet is made by combining red and blue.

Any intense color loses its tone and quality to the eye after steady looking in a strong light. How often, when work requires one to look constantly on the one color of a Beacon or Craig carnation, it will become mud color to the tired optic nerve! Look at something else for a while and the color will return at the first glance. Therefore, in decorating do not mass an intense color in large, unbroken groups under a strong light. Break up the mass by atmospheric spaces, or add foliage, its own if possible, or subdue the light.

WALKER'S WINDOW.

William Walker, of Louisville, Ky., has great confidence in window displays as effective local advertisements, and as a proof of the sincerity of his opinion he has sent the photograph which is here reproduced - a photograph taken just before Thanksgiving, when the window was decorated in honor of a football game.

Window of Wm. Walker, Louisville, Ky.

It is obvious, however, that this photograph does not do justice to the original. In presenting a view of flowers or floral decorations, ordinary photography is always inadequate, of course, and in this case the picture was further marred by some of the neighboring buildings, which persisted in "casting reflections." In spite of all this, the window display bears evidence of being artistic, and it was much admired by passers by, many of whom stepped into the store just t press their enthusiastic approval. football and the goal had their conspi ons places in the arrangement, and colors of both sides in the game well worked out with flowers and ribb

Mr. Walker adds that while he is that he has done well for a city establ ment, yet the call of the country more room is sounding pretty loudly his ears, and doubtless before long will have to answer the call and build a new, up-to-date plant, away from smoke and taxes.

BOATWRIGHT'S JAPANESE BOOTH

At the recent Georgia-Carolina Fa which was held in Augusta, Ga., and w opened by President Taft, a splendid re ord was made by Boatwright's Flora Co., of North Augusta, S. C. This fir made twenty entries for exhibits and won nearly as many blue ribbons.

The fair, as a whole, was the best eve held there. It was a success from star to finish, and was attended every day by large crowds.

The exhibit of Boatwright's Floral C represented a Japanese tea room, and th young ladies who acted as attendants wore Japanese costumes, as the illustra tion shows. The staging of the flowers and the arrangement of the booth were wholly the work of the firm's designer Mrs. Boatwright.

The Boatwrights are using rustic wor this year for pot covers, pedestals, and in every way, in fact, in which they can us it advantageously. It will be noticed on examining the picture, that all the plants in the exhibit were displayed in rustic pot covers. The centerpiece on the table was an original piece, made to ho seventeen Kift's glasses.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS

CHADWICK A KEEPER.

November 20 I cut a vase of Golden adwick mums for one of our churches. saw these flowers again at Christmas me, December 23, and not only were ey still in good condition, apparently as ough first cut, but actually showed up etter than any mums I saw in the mar et at Christmas time, though we had nonin and J. Rosette in the finest pos ble shape.

I should like to have the opinion of her readers of the REVIEW on this point. s durability a recognized quality of hadwick, or is it probable that its be avior, in the case I have related, was imply the result of some accidental cir umstance? W. J. OLDS.

GOOD COMMERCIAL VARIETIES.

Kindly advise me as to what you con sider the best commercial varieties of hrysanthemums, early, midseason and late, in the colors, white, pink and yel low. F. H. W.

The following list, while it may not be he best in cultivation with everyone, was ighly satisfactory with me, and F. H. W. could go farther and fare worse:

Early white, October Frost; early pink, Pacific Supreme; early yellow, Golden Glow.

Midseason white, Beatrice May; midseason pink, O. H. Broomhead; midseason yellow, Yellow Miller.

Late white, Chadwick or Mrs. Swinburne; late pink, W. R. Brock; late yellow, Nagoya.

October Frost must be taken on the early bud to get the best results and Beatrice May needs careful handling, but the balance of the list offers no serious obstacle to successful culture, handled in just the same way as the average commercial grower would handle them. Chadwick is not an absolutely pure white, although it is good and reliable. Swinburne in some sections is much the better flower. CHAS. H. TOTTY.

NITRATE OF POTASH FOR MUMS.

Though living in New Zealand, I depend largely on the REVIEW for my horticultural information, and I noticed that Chas. H. Totty, in a recent issue of the paper, mentioned the use of nitrate of potash saltpeter, I believe as a fertilizer for chrysanthemums. I should like to know more about this, as I grow them. How much of the fertilizer is used to a gallon of water? When should I start using it, and how long should I continue? J. H. R.

Nitrate of potash is a valuable, quick-acting fertilizer for chrysanthemums. It is the saltpeter of commerce and, as I understand it, is produced by boiling down the muriate of potash and nitrate of soda together. When used in conjunction with bone meal, which supplies the phosphoric acid, it makes a complete fertilizer, supplying both nitrogen and potash.

A safe proportion to use is one ounce to a 1 gallon can of water. We have used it constantly at the rate of one pound to a 50 gallon barrel of water. As to how often to use it, the operator must be governed by the condition of the plants. When the plants are accustomed to its use, they can be fed with it at every other watering, and it can be used right up until the bud shows color. The time to start applying this fertilizer is when the plants are well established, which is about eight to ten weeks after being planted in their flowering quarters.

J. H. R., living in New Zealand, probably grows his plants outside, as is done in Australia. In this section of the United States, which is, of course, the antipodes to New Zealand, we plant out on the benches in May and then commence feeding the plants at the end of July. He must govern himself according to his own season, concerning which he knows much more than I do.

IRIS FROM SEED.

Can Spanish and English iris be grown successfully from seed in this country, and if so, will they bloom the second year from seed? H. H. G.

Both Spanish and English iris can be raised from seed, but they will not flower before the third year. We do not know of any successful attempt being made to raise them in this way in America. The low price at which they are purchasable in Europe would tend to discourage the raising of home seedlings. Seed, when ripe, should be sown in flats of sandy loam and kept in a coldframe or cool greenhouse. It will not germinate until the following spring. The simplest method of propagation for these irises is by bulb offsets, which are freely produced. C. W.

TIME TO START CANNAS.

When should cannas be started to make good, salable plants in spring? R. F.

It is too early to start cannas. Examine them to see if any show signs of decaying. The end of February or first half of March is quite as early as they need to be started. Seasonable cultural notes on these will appear in the REVIEW later on the season from time to time.

PFEIFFER'S HOUNDS.

There is a sentiment about a pack of good dogs that appeals even to those who never by any chance will come in touch with rural life or hunting, and in the accompanying illustration of the hounds of Charles Pfeiffer a special interest attaches from the fact that the dogs play an important part in the care of their owner's carnation plants. Located at Fort Thomas, Ky., Mr. Pfeiffer finds that the rabbits with which the neighborhood abounds consider the young carnation plants a most toothsome delicacy; in fact, so fond of the carnation is bunny that it would be next to impossible to grow the plants in the field were it not for the services of the hounds. All summer long the dogs act as guards over the carnations, keeping the rabbits away. In the winter Mr. Pfeiffer and his friends employ the hounds for hunting, and many a florist has enjoyed their work.

CARNATIONS

THE RIGHT CUTTINGS TO TAKE.

Will you please tell us the proper cuttings to take from carnation plants grown for the flowers, and a reasonable number of cuttings? We wish to know where to get the cuttings, besides the ones taken from the cut flower stem.

I enclose a carnation stem, the upper portion of which was used for propagation, the other being left on the plant. Will this kind of cutting make a good, vigorous plant? A. L. M.

Neither of the specimens forwarded would be fit to use for propagating. The one is hard and would not root in two months, if ever. The other has begun to lengthen out and, although it would root, it would throw a bud soon after potting, and when topped back it would break weak. It could never make a bushy plant, because the joints would be too far apart.

If you can not get enough cuttings from the flower stems, or from the breaks which grow on the stubs after the flower has been cut, then I would advise you to take only flower shoots which have not begun to lengthen out. You should not be able to see the stems between the leaves. Such cuttings, when rooted, will be short jointed, and when topped will make bushy plants. In fact, plants from such cuttings will often make a stronger growth than any other. We believe, however, that if such cuttings were used year after year, the stock would become less floriferous than where side-shoot cuttings are used. Growers differ on this point to some extent and it is, therefore, an open question. All agree, however, that a shoot which has begun to lengthen out between the joints is unfit for use.

While we are on this subject of cuttings, I just want to tell you a little trick we learned in propagating Beacon and a few other varieties which have given propagators some trouble in rooting them. Perhaps you have noticed that after Beacon has been in sand about three weeks it begins to get soft and wilted. Your first impulse is to spray the plants liberally and to soak the sand. This we have found to be a great mistake, as the cuttings will damp off under such treatment instead of freshening up. We have found that if you will simply lay newspapers over them and leave them on over night a few times, until they freshen up, they will come through all right. Take off the papers, to allow fresh air, an hour or so in the morning and evening, and look out for damping if they are too wet in the sand. A. F. J. B.

FOR A CLOUDY CLIMATE.

What varieties of carnations are the best and most profitable to grow in a country with but little sunshine during the winter season? W. L.

Without sunshine for any considerable time, you can not expect to grow first-class carnations. The carnation loves sunshine, fresh air and a liberal supply of water. Without any one of these three, you can not grow carnations worthy of the name.

Those suffering the least would probably be those which have a short, sturdy growth and stiff stems. Among these would be all the Lawson varieties, including the original variety and the following sports: Melody, White Lawson, Red Lawson, Variegated Lawson, and Welcome. Winsor has the same habit as the foregoing. Other varieties would be May, Beacon, Victoria, Mayday, etc.

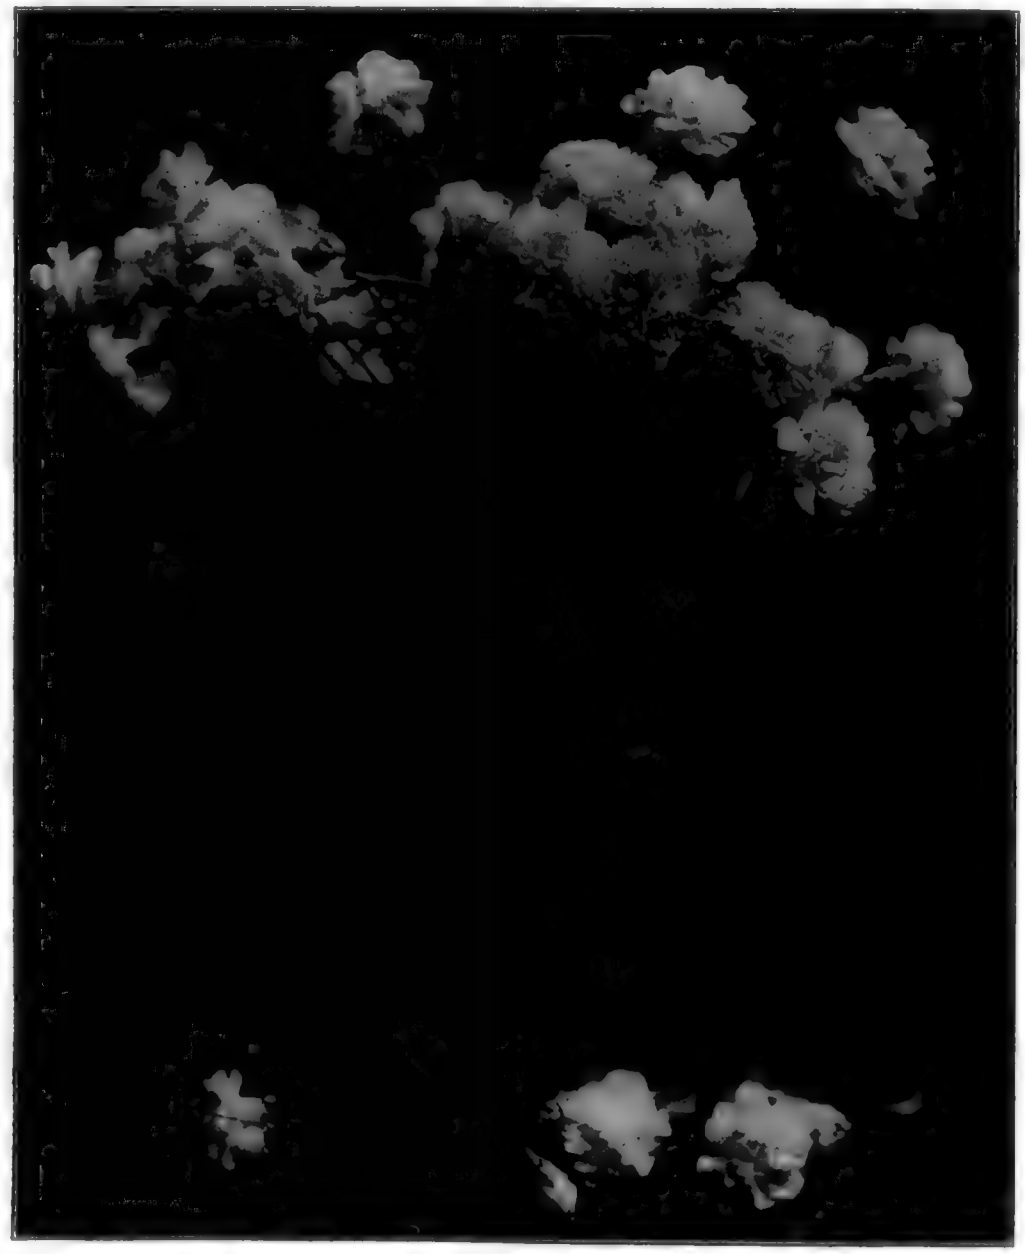
NEW HAMPSHIRE SEEDLINGS.

The members of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club of Boston, who visited the well-kept and thoroughly up-to-date establishment of George E. Buxton, Nashua, N. H., December 10, were much interested in several first-class seedling carnations which were seen growing in quantity. Of these Bon Ami and Granite State, both pure white, attracted special attention.



Bon Ami is the result of crossing Queen on Lady Bountiful in 1905. It somewhat resembles White Perfection, but makes a much better plant in the field. It has always been the first to come into bloom, with a heavy crop of flowers about the middle of October, and continuing throughout the season, with a crop equal to that of any of the white carnations in commerce. It has good size, being on an average three inches in diameter, with many reaching three and one-half inches when the plant is at its best.

The stems as seen in December were remarkably long and stiff, the average length being twenty-four inches, and the flowers were held up perfectly erect, the benches being a veritable mass of bloom. The percentage of splits was so small that it may be called a non-splitter.

Having given Bon Ami a four years' trial, and believing that it will prove itself a good friend to all who may try it, Mr. Buxton will send it out in limited quantities, commencing February 1, 1910.

Granite State is also the result of a Queen and Bountiful cross, but not from the same seedpod. The habit of growth is all that any critical grower can ask for. At housing time in August the plants were said to much resemble well grown plants of that grand old variety, William Scott. The stems, as seen a few weeks ago, were of extra length and held the pure white and beautifully formed flowers in a graceful, upright manner. Blooms average three to three and one-half inches in diameter, and Mr. Buxton states that from December 1 to July 1 stems thirty inches long are easily cut without entering the hard wood. Certainly the length when I saw them would corroborate this statement.

In Granite State Mr. Buxton believes

he has the ideal bread and butter carnation. For with freedom of bloom, size of flowers, health and habit of growth, with practically no split calyxes, he sees no reason why this carnation should not fill the long-felt want for a good commercial white. Granite State will not be disseminated until 1911.

Of the keeping qualities of both Bon Ami and Granite State nothing can be more convincing than Mr. Buxton's statement that the flowers appearing in the photographs used in preparing the accompanying illustrations kept in the store window of W. W. Powers for eight days in perfect condition, having been left there for exhibition after being photographed. Nashua, N. H., is likely to be heard from more in the future than in the past. Mr. Buxton has other varieties of sterling merit, which he is trying out, and those who are at all skeptical of New Hampshire carnations being strictly first-class should pay Nashua a visit.

AMOUNT OF NITRATE OF SODA.

What is a safe percentage of strength of nitrate of soda to a gallon of water for a weekly application to carnations, commencing March 1? H. F. C.

Start with about a half pound of nitrate of soda to fifty gallons of water. As the weather gets brighter and the days longer, you can increase this to one pound to fifty gallons of water.

IMPERFECT WHITE PERFECTION.

Do White Perfection carnations usually burst badly, come of dingy color, and crinkled? I have been growing these for two seasons, with the same results. Last year they were in raised benches, this year in solid beds. There is an enormous crop and it looks healthy. The houses are modern in every particular and I use plenty of air. The night temperature is 50 to 55 degrees—a little high, perhaps, for this variety, but our experience with other sorts has been that there is less bursting if the temperature is a little high, with plenty of air in the daytime. The stems are brittle.

Our soil is a rich, loamy sod, piled up a year or more, with about one-fourth cow manure and a liberal amount of bone meal. There has been no feeding since planting. The plants always grow small in the field and produce but few cuttings. Occasionally one comes that is deserving of the name—certainly fine. Last season, though not one per cent of the other kinds in the same house were split, White Perfection was split badly. C. B.

There seems to be a great difference in the experience of growers with this variety. With many it is easily the finest white carnation ever introduced, or in fact the finest of any color. Some, however, have the same experience as you have had. It does split at least a small percentage of its calyxes during midwinter, even with those who grow it successfully, though not enough to make it unprofitable. A moderate but even temperature, about 52 degrees, suits it best here.

We have never had much trouble with the crinkled petals, but have seen them at other places occasionally. That this defect is not natural to the variety, we feel certain. A well known grower, who has grown the variety extensively, recently expressed the opinion that the trouble complained of is caused by the soil being allowed to get too dry. Perhaps he is right. A. F. J. B.

OUTDOOR CARNATIONS.

Will it pay to propagate carnations now to grow outdoors for cutting? We are always short of flowers from the time we empty our carnation beds until they bloom again, and wondered if these started now would not help us out. We are located in Oklahoma. P. G. C.

Carnations are not grown so much outdoors, for late summer blooming, as their merits deserve. I have grown them for this purpose for a number of years, and they always furnish a good supply of nice flowers when the indoor stock is thrown out. Propagation during December and the first half of January will give you good, stocky plants in 4-inch pots to set out about the end of April, or even earlier in your climate. Pinching should not be done at any time after the plants are set in the field. As they start to flower, it will pay to give a support to the flowering stems, as heavy rain storms will bespatter them. The following have proved good outdoor bloomers: Enchantress, White Enchantress, Rose-pink Enchantress, Fenn, Winsor, Lawson, White Lawson, Fair Maid and Beacon.

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY.

The Cottage Gardens Co., Queens, N. Y., registers the following two new carnations:

Alma Ward, Prosperity x white seedling; white, sometimes showing delicate splashings of pink; size, three and one-half to four and one-half inches; stems, thirty-six to forty-two inches; remarkable for size of flower and length of stem; strong and vigorous grower.

Mrs. C. W. Ward, Mrs. Lawson x Mrs. Roosevelt; deep pink, lighter than Lawson, but darker than Winsor; size, three and one-half to four inches; stem, twenty-four to thirty-six inches; early and free bloomer, producing fine flowers as early as September 1.

TO REMOVE LEAD SHADING.

Will you kindly let me know what is a good way to remove oil and lead shading from greenhouses? J. M.

Corrosive sublimate will remove paint from glass. This must, however, be used carefully, as it is extremely caustic and will burn the flesh. By consulting a painter, further advice may be obtained as to the removal of such shading.

ROMANS FOR EASTER.

How shall I treat Roman hyacinths, which were put in flats December 27, to have them flower for Easter?

P. G. C.

You are late in putting your hyacinth bulbs in the soil, and I am afraid they will not bloom so satisfactorily as you would like. Keep them in a dark cellar, or in a frame or pit, where they can be covered with ashes. Soak well with water before covering. Easter comes quite early this year, and if you take in your hyacinths about March 1, they will be in ample time. They respond readily to forcing, or can be retarded at will.

C. W.

GROUND BONE FOR ROSES.

Will you please give us an idea of the value of raw ground bone for outdoor hybrid perpetual roses? Our soil is of a light, sandy nature, and we should like to get the fertilizer that will produce the largest quantity of bloom. W. F. C.

Bones are beneficial as a manure because their chief constituent, phosphate of lime, is also a constituent of all plants, and the gelatine which is also in bones is of itself a source of food to them. The analysis of the bones of the ox is here given: Phosphate of lime, 55; carbonate of lime, 4; animal matter, 33. There is a slight difference in the bones of the pig, sheep and horse.

Bones should be applied to crops in small pieces or powder, such as the commercial bone dust, as in that condition it is more easily assimilated. It promotes the luxuriance and beauty of most flowers. Twenty pounds to fifty square feet at planting time will be sufficient. Half of that quantity can be applied in about five weeks and hoed in by stirring the surface to the depth of two inches.

RIBES.

A ROSE GARDEN.

At the institution where I am working, I wish to make a rose garden, on a plot of ground 103½x160 feet. Around the entire plot I want to plant climbing roses, as I intend to have a trellis around the garden. What varieties of climbers will be the best to plant and how many will it take to go around the plot? Then, after the climbing roses are in, I want a 5-foot bed or border all around; next to the border I want a 3-foot walk, also running all around, and the rest of the plot will be laid off into 5-foot beds. The beds will extend the long way of the plot, but the plot will be divided in the middle by a 3-foot walk, crossing at right angles to the beds. The beds, therefore, will be seventy feet six inches long, or less than half the length of the plot. The beds will be separated by 2-foot walks.

I intend to plant these beds in hybrid teas. What are the best varieties? I want the best bloomers in the different colors. About how many will be required for each bed? If you have any suggestions to offer, or if you know of some better plan than the one mentioned, I shall be grateful for any information.

C. E. H.

If space will permit, it will be better to let the climbers around the garden have a special border three to four feet wide to themselves. If planted in the 5-foot border which encircles the garden, it would not give any other roses a chance, and at most you could not get in more than a single row of hybrid teas. At the several entrances you can construct arches, to rise higher than the fence on which the ramblers are growing. These should have a width of seven to eight feet. You could also, if you desired, secure a pretty effect by having an occasional arch down the center. This would, of course, necessitate a wider grass or gravel path and one bed would have to be sacrificed, unless you let the posts of the arches rest in the centers of the beds on each side of the central walk. This would give you arches eight feet wide. One of these every twelve to fifteen feet would add immensely to the beauty of the garden.

Plant the ramblers six feet apart. They like a generous border of pasture sod and cow manure. The hybrid teas prefer lighter soil. If you have naturally heavy loam, add sand or other gritty material, to render it more porous. The beds should be two feet deep and have good drainage, to secure the best results.

The outer fence will take about eighty-five climbers. If you place any arches within, they will require two each additional. Some of the best and most reliable ramblers are: Crimson Rambler, very hardy—the foliage in summer is its chief drawback; Baltimore Belle, blush turning white; Queen of the Prairie, double red; Dorothy Perkins, shell pink; Lady Gay, cherry pink; Hiawatha, single crimson, very fine; Tausendschon, rosy pink; Carmine Pillar, single, rosy carmine. The majority of these roses will withstand a winter minimum of 10 to 15 degrees below zero uninjured. In colder locations some protection may be necessary.

The 5-foot beds in the garden, twenty-six in number, will hold three rows each, one down the center and the others eighteen inches away from it on either side. Place the plants twenty-four inches apart and zigzag them to allow more space for development. This would call for 103 plants per bed, or 2,678 in all. If you decide to plant the additional border around the garden of similar width, it would call for 750 more; or if one row only is used on the inner side of the ramblers, 250 additional.

In planting hybrid teas, either cheap stock from pots or outdoor budded plants can be used. The latter are vastly preferable and grow with a vigor which the rooted cutting stock never attains, at least in our rigorous northern states. Plant the buds two inches below the surface. Spread the roots out well. Tramp firmly and water freely in dry weather if a constant succession of flowers is desired. Winter protection is, of course, necessary. The REVIEW each season gives practical directions on this point.

Some of the freest flowering and most reliable hybrid teas are: Caroline Testout, salmon pink; Bessie Brown, creamy white, immense size; Kaiserin Augusta Victoria, creamy white; Killarney, pale pink, very free; Mme. Abel Chatenay, rose, shaded salmon; Gruss an Teplitz, brilliant crimson, great vigor and grand for massing; Maman Cochet, white, and Maman Cochet, pink, both very free; Mme. Ravary, glorious orange yellow; Viscountess Folkestone, creamy white, center salmon pink; Antoine Rivoire, rosy flesh; Florence Pemberton, creamy white, suffused pink; Hon. Edith Gifford, pale flesh, tinted salmon rose; Lady Battersea, cherry crimson; Richmond, scarlet; Souvenir de President Carnot, pale flesh; Betty, ruddy gold, very beautiful; La France, silvery rose.

Out of a host of everblooming hybrid teas, the foregoing are all strictly first-class, and can hardly fail to please.

CAROLINE TESTOUT.

Caroline Testout is one of the best of roses for almost any locality, but nowhere is it more thoroughly at home than at Caroline Testout Roses at Portland, Ore.

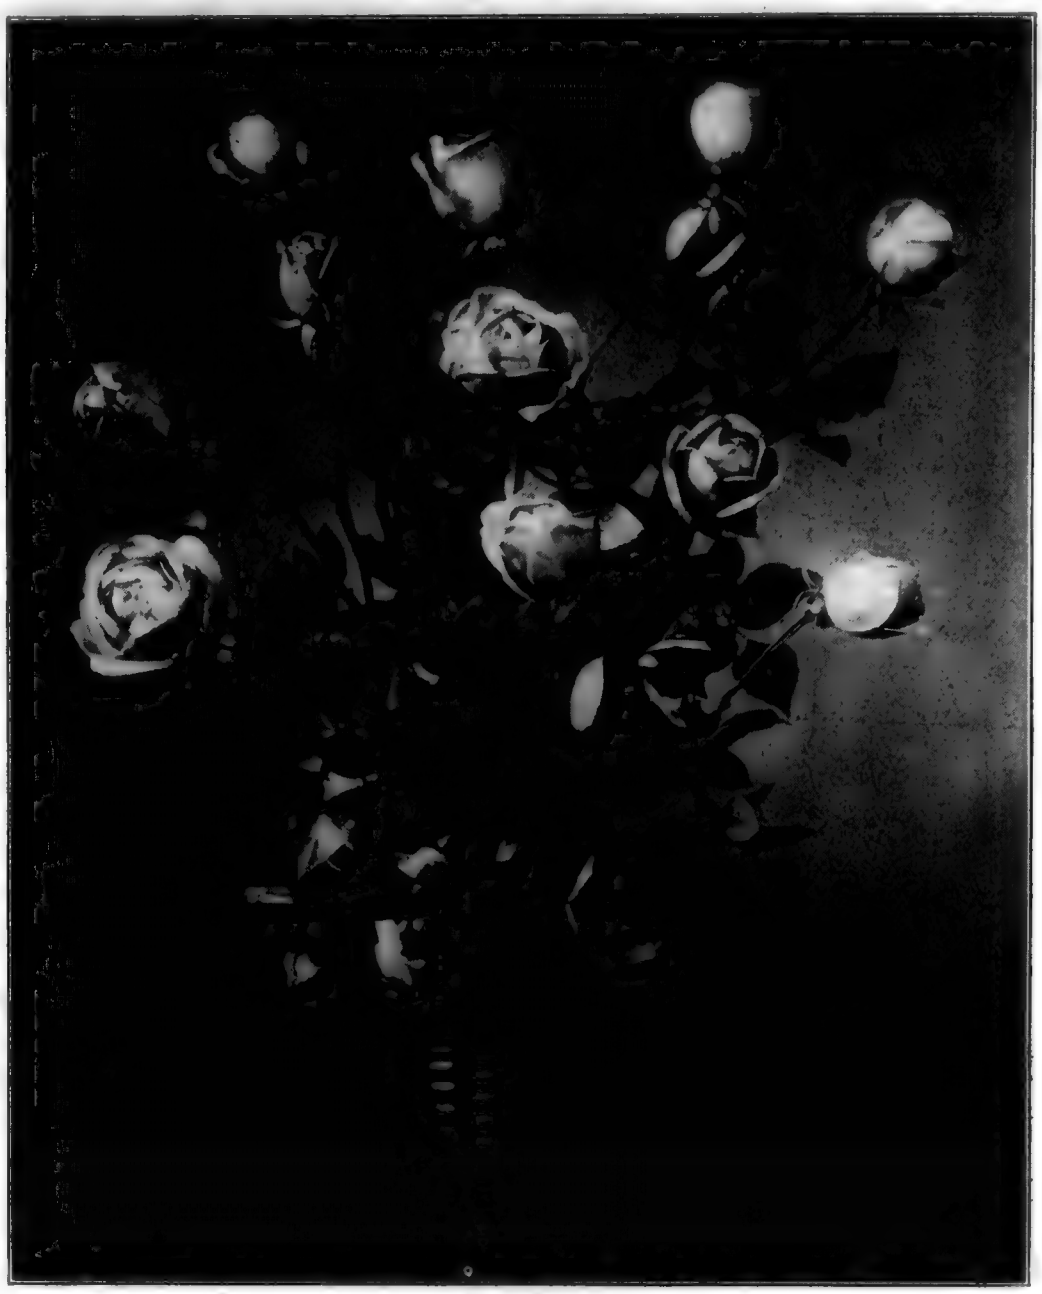
Portland, Ore. Portland is known as the Rose City, because the great success which attends the garden culture of roses there has led to the planting of immense quantities of stock. The Rose Society's "A rose for every home, a bush for every garden" is far too modest for Portland, where for months at a time they have an armful of roses for every home, cut from the bushes in the garden.

The accompanying illustration is from a photograph of some Caroline Testout roses, in Portland dooryards, supplied by G. S. Crego, the aster seed grower.

ROSE RADIANCE.

John Cook's latest rose is called Radiance. The accompanying illustration is the first one published of it and gives an idea of the cut blooms. Radiance is a seedling from Cardinal and Mr. Cook describes the color as a brilliant carmine pink with a silvery lining. The buds are large and are carried on long, stiff stems. Mr. Cook says the variety has proved a constant bloomer throughout the season. The flower opens well and is extremely fragrant.

BULBS FOR EASTER.



We have a lot of Von Sion daffodils, La Reine tulips and hyacinths that were placed in coldframes October 25. The pots are full of roots and everything looks to be in prime condition. Will you inform us when we should bring these into a cool house to have them in full bloom for Easter, without having to rush them too hard? Also please state the treatment of different plants. We also have some red, white and blue pans of hyacinths that we want for February 22. Have we still time to bloom them at that date?

F. P. F. C.

Keep the tulips, narcissi and hyacinths in as cold a place as you possibly can until three weeks before Easter. They may require one or two waterings before that time. Even if the surface soil looks damp, they will probably require a soaking. Many bulb failures are due to too dry conditions at the root. It is impossible to forecast March weather. If cold and dark, your bulbs might need a warm house for a day or two, but as a general rule the space of three weeks in a cool house should suffice.

The hyacinths wanted for February 22 should be taken into a cool house a month before they are required in bloom. Keep them darkened for a few days if the growths are insufficiently advanced, in order to draw them up. If placed in soil October 25, they should be finely rooted with strong shoots by January 22.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS

New Year's Musings.

The cycle of time brings us to another year. When we are young the years seem to be inordinately long, but in later years they pass all too swiftly. We are never too old to learn. The man who cannot learn anything, even from his humblest competitor, will soon be left in the rear of the procession. Each one should, after reviewing his successes and failures during the year just gone, aim to make good where he failed. The progressive man or woman will never be satisfied to walk precisely the same groove as in the preceding year. It is a case of progression or retrogression. Let us strive to make some advancement. With prosperity in the air, 1910 should prove the banner year.

There are few readers of the REVIEW, or for that matter of any other paper, who will lay claim to the "knowing it all" which we sometimes hear of. A large proportion of REVIEW readers probably have little to learn from cultural calendars, but each year sees many acquisitions to the ranks of the commercial growers, all of whom are not experts and most of whom are glad to receive some hints each week, such as the REVIEW affords. These cultural notes are rather intended for small growers and for beginners, but in the future, as in the past, we hope many of the more experienced growers may derive some little benefit. In so vast a country as ours, the weekly suggestions may not seem timely to all, owing to climatic differences. Allowances must be made for these things, but every effort will be made to have them seasonable for the great majority.

Seed Sowing.

During midwinter, while the power of the sun is at its minimum, seeds germinate satisfactorily, as they are not subjected to the drying out which is liable to occur later in the season, when solar heat is greater. It is rather early to start many seeds, but there are a few which can be sown with advantage now. Among foliage plants, Dracæna australis and Grevillea robusta are each useful. They germinate readily in a warm, moist house. That beautiful berried plant, so popular at Christmas, Ardisia crenulata, should now be sown. Remember, however, that you must wait fully three years to get plants of salable size.

All the begonias should be sown as early as possible in the new year. The soil for these and all other seeds should be largely leaf-mold, with a small proportion of loam and some sand added. Never use manure of any kind in seed pans. For begonias either pots, pans or flats can be used. Pass the top soil through a fine screen. Press it so as to form an even surface and water before sowing the seeds. After they are sown, a little fine sand may be scattered on the surface, but do not otherwise cover the seeds. Use sheets of glass and coverings of brown paper until the seedlings appear. Both the large tuberous rooted begonias and the fibrous sorts, such as Vernon, Erfordii and gracilis luminosa, should be started now. They germinate best in a night temperature of 65 degrees and like a moist atmosphere.

For planting indoors for a spring crop, sowings of calendula, candytuft, antirrhinums, annual larkspurs, stocks and sweet peas are all now seasonable. Petunia seed, especially if double plants are required, should also be sown. Being fine, the seeds of this annual should be treated in the same way as those of the begonia.

Propagation.

You have probably changed the sand in your propagating bench before now, and with steady cold weather the sand will be warm and in a fine condition for the successful rooting of many plants. Put in a good lot of coleus and throw away the old, bug-laden plants. Start up fuchsias and lantanas and get in a lot of the young shoots when they break. Heliotropes, Lobelia Emperor William, petunias and any other bedding plants can be rooted easily now. Never allow the sand to become dry where cuttings have been put in. When you water, give sufficient to properly soak the sand and keep all sunlight out until the cuttings are rooted.

Hydrangeas.

The hydrangeas for Easter will be growing nicely now and will require a little spreading out. If the pots are full of roots, some liquid manure, applied once a week, will be a great benefit. A good many breaks on the plants will not flower. Select a number of these and place them in the cutting bench. These, grown on and planted outside in early June, will make splendid plants for forcing next winter.

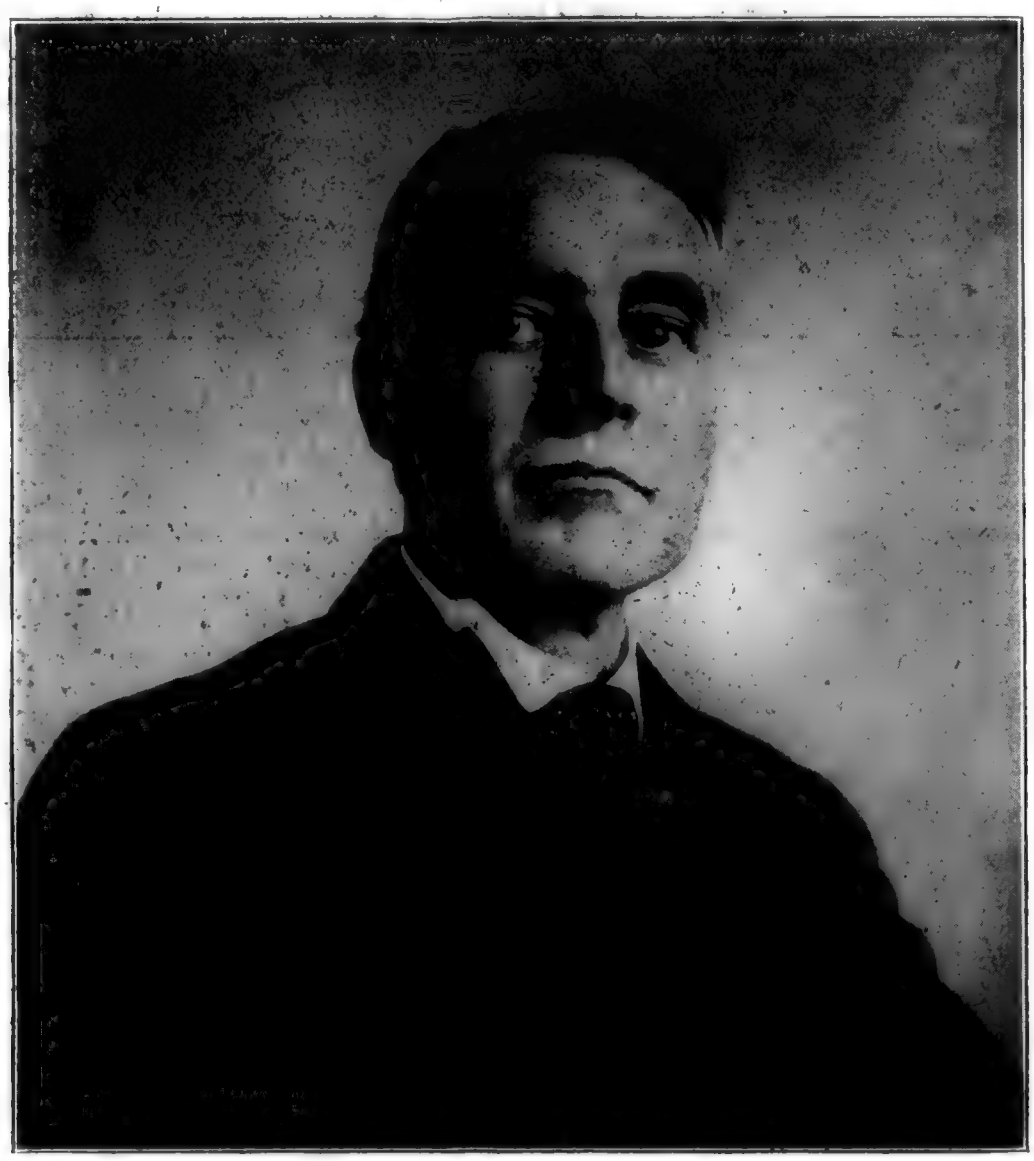
Ramblers.

The Easter ramblers are breaking strongly now, especially those which were pot grown all summer. Give them all possible light and sun and guard against cold drafts, which in the present tender condition of the growths will render them an easy mark for mildew. Use the sulphur bellows on the first apearance of this trouble and drop some sulphur on the steam pipes. It is necessary to act quickly, as nothing renders roses valueless more speedily than mildew. A night heat of 52 to 55 degrees will be all right for Easter ramblers.

Spanish Iris.

Some of the Spanish iris are now well sprouted and, the flats being full of active roots, a batch of them can be moved into a house where the night temperature is 45 to 48 degrees. In such a house they will grow well and flower freely, but do not attempt any forcing tactics, or failure only will result. Cut iris flowers are popular in late winter and early spring, and the prices realized average much better than on the majority of bulbous flowers.

Bedding Geraniums.



Geranium stock plants will by this time be carrying a heavy crop of cuttings. These, if inserted right away, may still be grown into nice 4-inch stock before spring sales start. A better plan than putting cuttings in the sand bench is to insert them singly in 2-inch pots, using a compost of loam and sand and standing them on a bench in full sun, where they can get a moderate bottom heat. Let the cuttings dry out well between the waterings. Under ordinarily favorable conditions, not over five per cent of these cuttings should fail to root.

Easter Lilies.

If your lilies are six inches high, they will be in season if given 60 degrees at night. If taller than this, let them have 5 degrees less heat. If less than six inches high, they will need constant forcing to get them into bloom by March 27. Remember, Easter comes early and we are likely to have a good deal of dark, cold weather. This being so, it is better to send the plants along now, and if you see buds peeping early in February, you will not be any too early. It is an easy matter to hold lilies back in a cool room for a few days when they are opening. It is a different proposition to try to sweat them into bloom in the last few days before Easter. The hardest forcing can be given the plants after the buds show, but if you are at all dubious about them, give them more warmth without delay.

Cinerarias.

Some growers grumble at the bench space cinerarias occupy at this season. To have them in good shape, with nice foliage down to the pots, they must not be allowed to crowd one another. As the flower stalks come up, feed them regularly; liquid cow or sheep manure, alternated with Clay's fertilizer once a week, will suit them. Grow them cool and airy, as they will not stand any forcing, and be sure you do not allow aphis to get any foothold on the plants. Cinerarias in a cool north house can be retarded until Easter this year, but any which flower earlier will make nice show plants for the store windows. They make good dwelling house plants, having good lasting qualities. Aphis is the only bugbear, as it usually appears within a fortnight, no matter how clean the plants when sold.

FROZEN CHRISTMAS STOCK.

Florists all over the country, but especially in the west, experienced much loss and disappointment over frozen stock at the Christmas just passed. Stock that was to fill orders already placed, and stock that was to take care of the trade that comes with a rush in those last days before Christmas, was received in a worthless condition, and cold type cannot express the disappointment of the retailers who had ordered novelties in plants and high-priced cut flowers, only to have them arrive frozen. Aside from the money loss, which is a heavy one, there is the loss of confidence and the fear to take the chances again next year that is demoralizing to business at the holiday season.

I do not think it is possible to provide absolute protection against all loss from frost when the thermometer goes to zero and below, but I do believe that in the great majority of cases loss can be avoided. There is no question that the express companies were not in position to take care of all the business of these few days, and they are responsible for some losses, and should make those losses good. There is no help for the box of perishable goods that stands forty-eight hours in an unheated barn or that is carted around town half a day in an unheated wagon, and this article is not for such cases.

For many years I have been closely connected with the shipping trade and have prepared plants and flowers for transportation to every part of our own country, and many for sending across the water. Mistakes were made at first and shipments would be reported received in poor condition, but if shippers would do as I did—follow their shipments occasionally and see them opened up—they would learn a lesson that would open their eyes not only to their own mistakes but to those of others.

Many years ago the late Flint Kennicott made this remark to me: "I cannot understand why florists risk their valuable shipments of flowers without plenty of packing, when they can get a whole bundle of old newspapers for 5 cents." But what is "plenty of packing"? In spite of all the articles that have been written on this subject, and all the discussions at the florists' conventions, a large proportion of shippers do not realize the import of these three words. "Plenty of packing" in mild weather is one thing, and in zero weather it is quite another. Here is just the trouble. Three or four thicknesses of newspapers will be liberal packing for mild days, when the distance is short and you carefully deliver the goods to the station with your own wagon; but in the cold spell we had in the west at the holidays it is no protection at all when shipments must be gathered up by an express collector, carried a long distance on cold cars, and exposed again for hours in delivery.

Many shippers and receivers of flowers make arrangements with local express agents for picking up and delivering with special wagons, and when this is not possible, call for and deliver shipments with their own wagons, rather than risk loss of goods. With these precautions, if boxes are properly packed, they will usually carry safely even in the coldest weather.

For cut flowers, use the corrugated boxes when possible, for they are warmer than wooden ones. In either case, line with from three to five thicknesses of newspaper, then wadding, and treat the outside of the box the same way, doubling the number of sheets of paper here in extreme weather, and enclose all with fiber paper.

Some flowers came into Chicago Christmas week wrapped in perhaps twenty sheets of paper, and then frozen stiff. They were flowers easily injured by cold and had been long on the road. The maximum loss in this way ought to be small, and should be borne by the express companies.

The packing of plants is more difficult. Do not use a tight box for plants. Use a low or shallow box reaching well above the pots, and nail corner posts reaching above the top of plants. Line first with heavy fiber paper, then from three to five sheets of newspaper, a sheet of wadding next, followed by another layer of the newspapers. Next place plants in and securely fasten with a strip of wood to keep them upright. The paper and wadding must then be brought well over the top of the plants and fastened securely, taking care to overlap the corners well. Wrap the whole with heavy fiber paper and securely crate the sides and top. Mark on top the name of the consignee and address; also "perishable plants," "deliver at once," "keep from frost," etc.; and the same cautions might be printed on address tags.

A lot of thirty-one crates so packed were shipped out when the temperature was below zero, going to five different states and to Canada. They were delivered to the depot in a special wagon, and so far but one lot has been reported frosted.

Another thing highly important is to bear in mind the sudden changes in temperature the plants are likely to encounter. Pack as if for zero weather, for you do not know but it may be that when your box reaches its destination. A shipment bound for Ohio left Chicago with the thermometer registering 40 degrees above zero, and the next morning found it 10 degrees below. It does not pay to take chances. Add to the expense and care you have had to grow your plants and flowers the little more that is necessary to carry them in comparative safety to their destination, and you will usually have nothing to regret.

Some plants from the east came into Chicago two weeks ago wrapped in one newspaper only and placed in an unlined box. The soil on them was frozen solid, of course. If you want the dollars for your stock at Christmas or any other time, do not slight your packing.

Take some plant and try your own experiments with it. Wrap and pack just as carefully as if for a long shipment and place it out of doors, say for two hours, and if it stands the test you can be reasonably sure you have found out what ordinarily is meant by "plenty of packing." Jas. G. Hancock.

NEWS, NOTES AND COMMENTS

Bethel, Me.—E. B. Davis had a vacant downtown store for the holiday trade and did a large business.

Batavia, Ill.—The Batavia Greenhouse Co. is adding a second story to its office building on South Batavia avenue.

Stevens Point, Wis.—W. E. Macklin had 2,000 Chadwick and Yellow Chadwick for the Christmas trade and found them first-class property.

North Cambridge, Mass.—Just at the height of the Christmas rush, John McKenzie was laid up with a troublesome foot, which recently required an operation.

Muncie, Ind.—Mrs. Geo. F. Miller says that the Christmas trade in Muncie was good in spite of the bad weather, which prevented people from getting out as much as in former years.

Salem, Mass.—The greenhouses of Wm. T. Walke, on Loring avenue, were damaged by fire on the night of December 20. The flames started near the boiler and swept through one of the houses, causing a loss of $300.

Woodsfield, O.—A fire at the establishment of J. M. Bishop, on the morning of December 20, destroyed his office, with all its contents, and also a part of one of his greenhouses. A pet dog, which sleeps in the office, awakened the family by its cries, and thus saved the residence and the rest of the houses from destruction.

Lancaster, Pa.—J. P. Siebold had an active trade during the whole of last year and an especially brisk business at the holidays. He finds ready sale for all he can produce, in plants, flowers and vegetables, and during the winter seasons he handles considerable quantities of hothouse vegetables from other growers, as he cannot grow enough for his trade.

South Portland, Me.—The store and greenhouse of Frank W. Dyer, on Ocean street, were completely destroyed by fire December 27. The fire started in a shed at the rear of a neighboring grocery and spread rapidly, on account of the fact that the fire department was delayed by the deep snowdrifts. Two buildings, in addition to Mr. Dyer's property, were burned to the ground. Mr. Dyer's loss amounted to some thousands of dollars, with only $700 of insurance.

Wheeling, W. Va.—W. F. Zane & Son made a large number of ground pine wreaths for holiday decorations. They secure the pine from Michigan.

Newton, Mass.—A small greenhouse owned by John McCarthy and situated near his dwelling, at 37 North street, was destroyed by fire December 5.

Des Moines, Ia.—Carl L. Olson, a florist connected with the Iowa Seed Co., and Hazel L. Divilbiss were married December 22.

Stoughton, Mass.—Horace W. Mann, the Washington street florist, was drawn for jury service in the Norfold superior court, which convened at Dedham, Mass., December 13.

Cambridge, Mass.—One of the greenhouses of Wm. E. Doyle, on Cambridge street near Leonard avenue, was damaged by fire early on Christmas morning. The loss amounted to several hundred dollars. The fire was caused by an overheated boiler.

Lexington, Ky.—The store of Honaker The Florist, on Main street near Upper street, was one of the finest show places in the city during the holidays and the amount of trade easily eclipsed that of a year ago. The window display included a dozen or more small orange trees, grown at Honaker's greenhouses, and bearing good-sized oranges.

Fort Madison, Ia.—J. M. Auge reports that Christmas trade was considerably larger than in former years, with cut flowers as the main feature, because the stormy weather of December 24 made the delivery of plants practically impossible. Red carnations were scarce, with demand in excess of the supply. Funeral work was heavy and cleaned up all white stock.

Augusta, Ga.—Christmas trade, with all the florists, was better than the previous year. Good weather was experienced until Friday, when rain set in, which lasted till noon Christmas. This of course cut down the sales somewhat below the mark that continued good weather would have made. Balk's Nursery proved equal to the emergency in effecting temporary repairs to the damage it suffered from the fire, December 13, and handled a larger trade than it did the previous Christmas.

Jacksonville, Fla.—The Jacksonville Floral Co. secured a neighboring vacant store for its Christmas business in greens and potted plants.

Cincinnati, O.—J. A. Peterson sent the trade a unique New Year's card, his own portrait surrounded by a wreath of holly embossed in colors.

Lawrence, Kan.—C. A. Hicks reports an excellent holiday trade. Everything was sold out and there was a heavier call for plants than ever before.

Hamilton, O.—The greenhouses at the country home of Col. J. C. Hooven, south of Hamilton, were partly destroyed by fire December 10. Neighbors went to the rescue and saved much of the property.

Augusta, Ga.—Stulb's Nursery, which conducts a business in plants and cut flowers, near the office of the City cemetery, reports that everything is selling at good prices and business is entirely satisfactory. Christmas trade was more than double that of a year ago.

Gloucester, Mass.—During the storm of Sunday, December 26, the ocean tide rose so high as to flood the greenhouse boiler-rooms on the estates of Lester Leland and the late Robert C. Hooper, causing serious damage to the plants and other property. The loss on the Leland estate was estimated at $10,000.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Diamond Flower Shop is the name of a store which was opened last summer at the corner of Ridge avenue and Diamond street, by Geo. W. Grover & Son, formerly located at 3441 Ridge avenue. Trade at the new place was somewhat dull for a time, as might be expected, but the holiday business was profitable and the outlook for 1910 is quite hopeful.

Nashua, N. H.—W. W. Powers' holiday trade this year was far ahead of his expectations and surpassed anything in former years. Trade commenced early and increased steadily until everything was sold out. Flowering plants of all kinds were in great demand, and there was a good sale for brass jardinieres, of which he handles a large line. Cut flowers were sold out clean. Christmas greens also were in great demand. A number of extra help were kept constantly on the move and all orders were properly packed and sent out on time.

SNOW INCREASES CUTS.

It used to be the idea that snow was a decided detriment to the production of cut flowers; it lay for days on the glass of the old-style greenhouses, shut out the light and retarded the development of blooms. But one of the observing, thinking men in the selling end of the business—where thought is becoming each year more and more necessary—says that snow is no longer a detriment, that it is a strong factor in increasing production. He figures it out this way: With the modern iron-gutter houses the snow passes off practically as fast as it falls; it leaves the glass clear and the ground dazzling white. Everybody knows that a house kept painted pure white is better to grow in than one that is unpainted; that white surroundings make for a lighter house than one that is in dark environment. Hence this authority argues that a snowy season like the present is a positive help to the cut flower grower.

A CROP FOR EASTER.

Will you tell me what to put in a vacant space I have in a greenhouse? I have a ground bed in the greenhouse, fifty feet long, with good soil. I have been thinking of Paper White narcissi for Easter bloom. Is it too late to start the bulbs? I have an excellent cellar for starting them. Would it be best to plant in flats and then set the flats on this bench after starting, or is there any other kind of stock which would be more profitable? What would be a good temperature for narcissi? The greenhouse is steam heated. I have a good many potted plumbagos cut back. Could I bring them into bloom for Easter?

M. E. H.

It is now too late to start bulbs of Paper White narcissi. Any which are still out of the soil will be too badly dried up to be of any value. You could purchase any of the spiræas (astilbes), such as grandiflora, astilboides, floribunda, Gladstone and the old Japonica. Pots of these will sell well for Easter. Other plants, such as azaleas, lilacs and genistas, would be in flower by the end of March.

Plumbagos would not be in season and I am afraid it will be useless to plant any crop directly into the bed. Less than three months remain until Easter, and the best thing to do would be to grow some of the plants named, in pots. Allow them ten weeks each, except the lilac, for which three weeks less will suffice in a night temperature of 50 to 55 degrees.

C.

ASTERS FOR MEMORIAL DAY.

Can I grow asters for Memorial day, and what variety? P. G. C.

None of the asters sown now would flower for Memorial day; even the earliest varieties, such as Queen of the Market, the standard early sort, and early Hohenzollern, would not be in season. These would, however, make a useful summer crop for you later in the summer, coming in as they do when carnations are poor and other flowers suitable for cutting or design work scarce.

There are a number of crops you could grow for Memorial day trade. Among these are ten weeks' stocks, sown about February 14; white candytuft, March 1; antirrhinums, sown now; any of the large flowering gladioli, planted about February 1; sweet peas, February 1; annual larkspurs in several colors, sown at once. Dahlias will also flower at the time named if tubers are now started. Note an article on these in a recent issue of the REVIEW.

Geraniums

GERANIUMS FOR BEDDING.

I have a house, 16x30, in which I wish to grow bedding plants. I have had splendid success in rooting geraniums and had thought of buying stock plants and rooting cuttings for myself and the trade. Would you advise a beginner to do this? If so, which would be the cheapest in the end, to buy the plants now or in the spring? Would you advise growing only four or five varieties, or several? R. F.

The present is not a good time to buy stock plants of geraniums. Secure these in the fall. Your best plan now would be to purchase either rooted cuttings from sand or small plants from 2-inch pots. These can be grown into nice, bushy stock in 4-inch pots for sales in May. It will pay you to purchase young plants now and grow them on if you have the room to spare. I would certainly not grow too many varieties; four or five different varieties would be sufficient, and if two-thirds of these are scarlet or crimson and the balance pink and white, that would be about the right proportion. As a general thing, double or semi-double sorts are favored for bedding, but you might try some Paul Crampel and Jacquerie among singles. They are superb bedders.

These would, however, make a useful summer crop for you later in the summer, coming in as they do when carnations are poor and other flowers suitable for cutting or design work scarce.

There are a number of crops you could grow for Memorial day trade. Among these are ten weeks' stocks, sown about February 14; white candytuft, March 1; antirrhinums, sown now; any of the large flowering gladioli, planted about February 1; sweet peas, February 1; annual larkspurs in several colors, sown at once. Dahlias will also flower at the time named if tubers are now started. Note an article on these in a recent issue of the REVIEW.

Geraniums

GERANIUMS FOR BEDDING.

I have a house, 16x30, in which I wish to grow bedding plants. I have had splendid success in rooting geraniums and had thought of buying stock plants and rooting cuttings for myself and the trade. Would you advise a beginner to do this? If so, which would be the cheapest in the end, to buy the plants now or in the spring? Would you advise growing only four or five varieties, or several? R. F.

The present is not a good time to buy stock plants of geraniums. Secure these in the fall. Your best plan now would be to purchase either rooted cuttings from sand or small plants from 2 inch pots. These can be grown into nice, bushy stock in 4 inch pots for sales in May. It will pay you to purchase young plants now and grow them on if you have the room to spare. I would certainly not grow too many varieties; four or five different varieties would be sufficient, and if two-thirds of these are scarlet or crimson and the balance pink and white, that would be about the right proportion. As a general thing, double or semi-double sorts are favored for bedding, but you might try some Paul Crampel and Jacquerie among singles. They are superb bedders.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Incorporated by Act of Congress March 4, '01

Officers for 1910: President, F. R. Pierson, Tarrytown, N. Y.; vice-president, F. W. Vick, Rochester, N. Y.; secretary, H. B. Dorner, Urbana, Ill.; treasurer, H. B. Beatty, Pittsburg, Pa.

Annual convention, Rochester, N. Y., August 16 to 19, 1910.

RESULTS.
We give them. You get them.
We both have them.

Not a few subscribers save themselves the bother of annual renewal by sending the Review $2, $3, or sometimes $5, instead of the dollar-bill that insures fifty-two visits of the paper.

THE SATISFIED CUSTOMER.

There are many factors which may influence an advertiser part of the time, but it is actual results which influence him most of the time.

Enclosed you will find $1 for the renewal of my subscription to the Weekly Florists' Review. No other investment will yield me as great an income as the above. Through the agency of the Review during the past two years I have disposed of several hundreds of dollars' worth of surplus stock, for which please accept my thanks.—A. R. Watkins, Gaithersburg, Md., December 24, 1909.

OBITUARY.

Mrs. C. Frauenfelder.

Martha Frauenfelder, wife of Conrad Frauenfelder, the well known retail florist on West Madison street, Chicago, died early in the morning of January 1, after an illness dating back to last spring. She was operated on April 28 and for a brief time was improved in health, but for the greater part of the time which has elapsed she was confined to her couch. Mrs. Frauenfelder thoroughly appreciated the hopeless character of her illness, but it was her wish to be spared until after the Christmas holidays, and at Christmas time she was able to participate in the children's tree and to prepare with her own hands a number of the gifts for friends.

Mrs. Frauenfelder left two children, Edna and Hazel. She also is survived by her father, George H. Froboese, and a sister. Mr. Froboese is associated with Mr. Frauenfelder in the flower business. The funeral was held from the residence, 3343 West Madison street, Chicago, on the afternoon of January 4 and was largely attended. There was an exceptionally large showing of floral pieces, for Mr. and Mrs. Frauenfelder were widely known in their neighborhood and in the trade. A large number of Chicago florists were in attendance. The remains were placed in the vault at Waldheim cemetery. Mr. Frauenfelder is himself in precarious health.

Frederick Sunkel.

Frederick Sunkel, a well known landscape gardener, died at his home in Alameda, Cal., December 24. He had resided in that town for fifty-four years and was 78 years of age at the time of his death. He is survived by three sons and two daughters. Mr. Sunkel was a native of Germany.

Frederick L. Bruenig.

Frederick L. Bruenig, of St. Louis, Mo., father of Mrs. Henry Berning, died Wednesday, December 29, after a long illness. He was 63 years of age. Mr. Bruenig's wife died only a week ago. The funeral took place from the residence of Mr. Berning, Friday, December 31, and was attended by many friends in the trade, who sent beautiful floral designs. The trade extends its sympathy to Mrs. Berning and Otto Bruenig, they having lost both mother and father inside of ten days.

THE SITUATION IN GLASS.

It is stated by manufacturers in the vicinity of Columbus, O., that the buying movement in window glass has started in earnest, and the outlook is for the best trade in the history of the industry. It was but a few months ago that the manufacturers were selling their product at fifty-six per cent of the list price, and now they are getting seventy-five per cent of the list price, and cannot fill orders. Dealers delayed buying all during the fall, but now they are in the market and the factories are being operated to their full capacity. It is now practically certain that the Imperial Window Glass Co., the new selling agency of the independent factories, will open its offices in Pittsburg about January 10, and be an active factor in the glass trade. The new company now has contracts signed with all but one or two of the glass factories of the country outside the American Window Glass Co., and will handle the output of over 2,000 pots.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The conditions attending the departure of the old year were without precedent in this market. Never before has there been anything like the quantity of stock between Christmas and New Year's, and never at this season have prices varied so widely. Not so many years ago the prices of cut flowers held practically at the Christmas level until after New Year's, but for several seasons there has been a tendency for lower values, and this year the extremely large receipts produced a decline in prices that was without parallel. The slump was most severe right after Christmas, and there was a general improvement as the week progressed and buyers again came into the market. Many houses say that because of the large supplies of stock, and in spite of the unusually low prices, their sales for the final week of the year beat all records for the corresponding period. Toward the latter part of last week business was exceptionally good and prices varied less widely as between the stock sold on the legitimate demand and that jobbed off. The trouble has been for some weeks that the weather was so severe that the cheap salesmen were practically out of business. The result has been that after the requirements of the shipping trade and the local retailers had been met, there was practically no outlet for the surplus, which therefore realized far less money than it would have realized had the people who cater to the transient trade in loose flowers been operating, as they do in mild weather.

The New Year's demand was excellent, but the unfortunate Christmas experience with carnations was repeated, though the unsold quantities were not quite so great. There is considerable unrest among the carnation growers because they did not realize what they expected either at Christmas or New Year's. One wholesaler says he handled between Christmas and New Year's at least three times as many flowers as he

It is a most significant fact that for the year 1909 our business shows the greatest increase in its history.

The Increase Was

Exactly $71,009.10

We feel that we are perfectly justified in becoming enthusiastic over this showing, for the increase in our business is the measure of our success in serving the interests of our growers and buyers. We certainly must be serving both well or such an increase would not have been possible.

We believe the rapid but steady growth of our business is a matter of public interest, because every buyer should wish to know where his interests are best looked after.

Our success is founded on two factors:

1st. Strictest business integrity and best business methods.

2d. By concentrating our energies on selling cut flowers only, we are able to handle each consignment so carefully that every flower not only goes out in the best possible condition, but actually in better condition than when received from the growers.

Our Facilities for 1910

are greater than ever. Our policy of business-building has gained for us the support of a list of growers in which we take the greatest pride—good growers, one and all. Our present supply is the greatest in our history, the average quality the best, and our store force adequate to give new customers the kind of service that has held the old.

Our Leaders: Beauties, Killarneys, Carnations, Sweet Peas, Valley, Green Goods.

ever did before in the same week, and others subscribe to the statement. It probably was the first time on record that carnations ever went to waste in that week of the year. But the increase in the supply of Beauties was so great that the price came down on the run, and other roses also were much lower. White roses maintained their position better than almost anything else, but violets sold splendidly as New Year's approached and made rather better prices than had been anticipated.

The new year has started with the market liberally supplied in all lines, but business is good and a cheerful tone pervades the wholesale market. Prices are lower than they usually are at this season, but the supply is so much larger than usual that the volume of sales is running into good money. With the lower prices retailers are able to give their customers good value and at the same time make fair profits for themselves.

White roses are the only item that appears short of the demand; these are not always to be had in the grade wanted unless notice of an hour or two is given. Callas are not in large supply, but Easter lilies are more plentiful. Valley is abundant one day and scarce the next. Proserpine tulips have come into the market, but are yet too short in stem to sell well.

Asparagus strings are not abundant and smilax is not pushing for a market, but other indoor greens are plentiful. There is complaint as to the quality of boxwood, and some of the hardy cut ferns are proving a disappointment thus early.

Business for December.

December was a good month in the Chicago market. The business of nearly all the wholesalers showed an increase compared with the same month a year ago. The weather was far colder than normal through almost the whole of the month, but trade was fairly steady—shipping was especially good. The lull before the Christmas rush was hardly so pronounced as usual, and Christmas gave an increase in sales for a considerable number of houses, in spite of the fate that overtook quite a few of the carnations. Between Christmas and New Year's the total of sales ran materially above those of other years, with a fine business for New Year's.

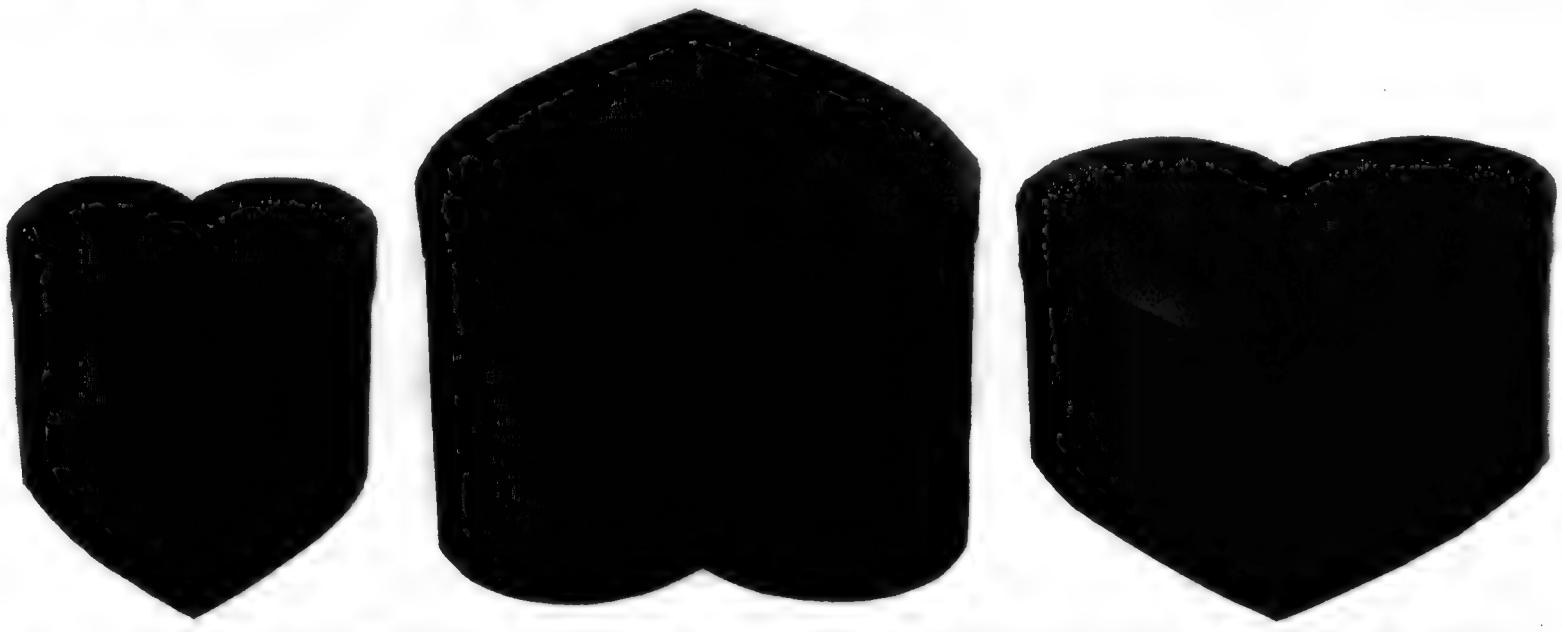
The Year's Business.

It is the fashion for several of the daily papers to publish New Year's day elaborate statistics of Chicago's wholesale and manufacturing industries. Of course these are merely estimates, but they are estimates made by good judges after interviews with editors of trade papers, heads of large establishments, etc. The Tribune puts the wholesale cut flower trade of Chicago for 1909 as $2,220,000, against $2,000,000 in 1908. The Record-Herald makes it $2,000,000 in 1909, against $1,815,000 in 1908. They agree that the increase was about ten per cent. The Review thinks the total of sales of cut flowers and green goods at wholesale in this market in 1909 ran somewhere from $2,000,000 to $2,250,000.



The Record-Herald quotes Peter Reinberg on the year as follows: "In Chicago and the immediate vicinity are located the largest greenhouse establishments in the world. They have been added to greatly during the past year by the erection of new establishments and by additions to the old ones. The increase in the amount of glass caused a very large increase in the output, which in turn made lower and more uniform prices. The retail florist has been able to get most anything he needed at reasonable prices at all times during the year, and could give his customers much better value for their money. The fluctuations in the market were much less than previously. The output of flowers in Chicago has been so great that the Chicago wholesaler is getting business away from the New York flower market, as far east as Rochester and Utica. The northwest has bought thousands of dollars' worth of flowers more than last year, the most notable increase being in the Dakotas."

December Weather.

With the single exception of 1903, December was the coldest last month of the year since 1876. The mean temperature was 9 degrees below that of December, 1908, and 11 degrees below that of the same month in either of the two preceding years. At no time in the month did the temperature get above 53 degrees, and the lowest was 7 below, indicating how steadily cold it was. There was forty-five per cent of the possible sunshine, which was high considering the fact that there were only seven clear days and eighteen upon which snow fell. The total snowfall for the month was 19.1 inches. To add to the growers' troubles, the wind movement was 12,278 miles, making an average hourly velocity of sixteen miles, which helped the cold weather to eat into the coal pile.

Various Notes.

Just before Christmas the three stores operated by the Butler Floral Co., or R. Jahn, were closed on an execution under a judgment for some $400 in favor of W. L. Palinsky for plants bought last Easter. On payment of $150 in cash, Mr. Palinsky's attorneys released the Sheridan road store and the temporary Christmas store on the west side of Dearborn street, just below Van Buren, but they held the fixtures of the main store, carting them to storage. Mr. Jahn is now operating the temporary store across the street from his former main one, as the Old Colony Floral Co., R. Jahn manager. The Sheridan road store is going on as heretofore.

When Andrew McAdams visited a number of the wholesale houses last week he said he was planning a California trip, but he neglected to state that he would be taking a bride with him. On New Year's eve Mr. McAdams and Rhoda Robertson were married at the family home at Fifty-third street and Kimbark avenue. Mr. McAdams is 60 years of age and his bride, who was his sister-in-law, is 52. Her former home was in Florida, but for the last two or three years she has been a member of the McAdams household. Mr. McAdams is an ex-president of the Chicago Florists' Club and one of the best liked men in the trade in Chicago. Mr. and Mrs. McAdams left immediately for California, but congratulations will be in order on their return.

After an experience of two months in the wholesale business, as manager of the Percy Jones commission establishment, George Walther has concluded that his best interests lie in giving his personal attention to his retail store on Sixty-third street. Henry Van Gelder, who was with Percy Jones for several years prior to that gentleman's death, will in future have charge, the change taking place January 1.

favor this season, selling better than it has for years. He gives three reasons for its popularity: First, that the quality of the flowers is better than heretofore offered in this market; second, that the methods of bunching, shipping and handling have improved, so that the flowers reach the retailers in fresher condition; third, that the leading retailers now put up their corsage bunches in such attractive fashion that people who have the price simply can't resist. Mr. Amling notes that the increase in sales is principally to the high-class stores.

Conrad Frauenfelder is one of the best liked men in the trade and it was with sincere regret that the market learned of the death of Mrs. Frauenfelder New Year's morning, particulars of which will be found in the obituary column.

It was a sad New Year for William P. Kyle, of Kyle & Foerster, whose only son died on the last day of the old year. Francis L. Kyle was approaching his ninth birthday. He was a bright child, but for several years had suffered ill health and for many months had been an invalid. Every effort was made to fan the waning fires of life into a steady glow, but the flame burned itself out with the end of the year. The funeral was held Sunday morning, January 2, from the family home at 5437 Lake avenue. There were many flowers, for Mr. and Mrs. Kyle have the sympathy of all who know them. Interment was at Mount Greenwood.

With the new year Nick Miller joined the J. B. Deamud Co., and Miss Florence L. Emmett, who has been in charge of the books for some years and secretary since the incorporation, retired. Mr. Miller is well known as grower, greenhouse builder and exhibition manager. William Homburg, of the J. B. Deamud Co., has been on the sick list for several days.

James Aldus, Jr., Iowa City, Ia., and Miss Margaret Lee were married in Chicago New Year's eve. Mr. Aldus arrived so late that day that he knew he could not obtain a marriage license, so he telegraphed and arrangements were made to accommodate him after the usual office hours.

W. J. Smyth has so far recovered from his automobile accident of last summer that he now walks with only a slight limp, which he expects soon to disappear. He still carries a cane.

E. C. Amling's employees at Christmas presented him with a handsome sealskin cap, of which he is extremely proud.

W. H. Hilton has been seriously ill, but is now on the road to recovery. Shortly before Christmas his life was despaired of.

Leonard Kill and Mrs. Kill, with their little girl, started for California Tuesday evening. There was quite a gathering at the Santa Fe station to see them off.

Mr. Kill plans to return March 17, but did not select the day because of its associations with the shamrock.

The annual meeting of the Flower Growers' Market stockholders was called for January 3, but a quorum did not attend, so the meeting was postponed.

Henry Payne, of Hinsdale, has been experiencing a fuel famine for some little time. Bassett & Washburn were down to a week's supply, but say cars now are coming in every day.

The January meeting of the Florists' Club will be held at the Union restaurant Thursday evening, January 6. Election of officers is in order. The only contests are for secretary and trustees.

After boring for months, Hoerber Bros. struck rock in their well at Des Plaines at a depth of 380 feet. Rock usually means water, so that they hope soon to be able to dispense with the connection with the public plant at Des Plaines.

W. N. Rudd ceased to be secretary of the S. A. F. January 1, but assumed the less arduous duties of director. He says he has enjoyed the secretaryship exceedingly, but is glad to pass the job on to another. During the last year fifty-two life members were added to the rolls.

One of the week's visitors was J. J. Karins, representing Henry A. Dreer, Philadelphia.

Mrs. W. E. Lynch returned New Year's day from her visit at Hatfield, Mass., where her mother is ill.

John Zech says he thinks there are ten pink roses for every white one now in market, while the proportion should be about three to one.

Fritz Bahr's daughter, Mona, is quite ill with typhoid fever.

Charles Young, of C. Young & Sons Co., St. Louis, is in town this week buying stock for some big decorations.

J. A. Peterson, of Cincinnati, was in town for a couple of days this week with a beautiful sample plant of his new begonia, Gloire de Cincinnati.

Bowling.

Allie Zech did the florists credit in the city bowling tournament New Year's eve. With E. F. Winterson he bowled in the doubles, and the scores they made were as follows:

Player.	1st	2d	3d	T'l
E. F. Winterson	147	146	196	489
A. Zech	205	245	191	641
Total				1,130

Both Mr. Winterson and Mr. Zech bowled individually in the singles, and made these scores:

Player.	1st	2d	3d	T'l
E. F. Winterson	164	161	160	485
A. Zech	163	173	151	487

The Florists will bowl in the five-men team contest at 11 p. m. January 6.

The scores made by the Florists' Bowlers last week were as follows:

Carnations.	1st	2d	3d	Roses.	1st	2d	3d

BOSTON.

The Market.

As is customary after Christmas, business has been rather quiet during the last week. The severe weather, deep snow, accompanied by zero temperatures, in some cases 10 to 15 degrees below not far from Boston, lasted a full week, and this in itself was the reverse of stimulating for trade. Roses are seen in good numbers and have taken a considerable drop in prices, as have carnations; $4 is as much as the best flowers will now bring. Violets, owing to the cold weather, are less plentiful. Growers of doubles say that plants which gave heavy pickings in the fall are now producing little. Bulbous stock, such as Paper Whites and Roman hyacinths, is abundant, while a good supply of Trumpet Majors also is coming in. Tulips are not yet abundant.

Sweet peas are improving in quality. Many coming in have fine stems. Mont Blanc and Earliest of All are the sorts seen. Lilies and callas sell about the same as does lily of the valley. Cypripediums are plentiful, while cattleyas are now in heaviest supply but selling well. Among other flowers, small lots of English primroses, forget-me-nots and wallflowers are coming in. Mignonette, antirrhinum and marguerites are other flowers coming in of fine quality. Yellow marguerites sell much better than the white. Some poinsettias are still seen, but no one wants them after Christmas. There is a good, steady call for green stock.

Horticultural Society.

At a meeting of the board of trustees of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, January 1, the offer was accepted of the sum of $2,500 by G. R. White, the income of which it is stipulated shall be used for the purchase of a suitable gold medal to the man or woman, commercial firm or institution which has done the most for the advancement of horticulture in its broadest sense during the year. The trustees being given the privilege of making the first award immediately, it was unanimously bestowed upon Prof. Charles S. Sargent, of the Arnold Arboretum, whose work during the last year has included the securing of hundreds of varieties of new Chinese plants, collected under his direction by E. H. Wilson. The new award will be called the George R. White medal of honor, and is open to any individual or firm in the United States.

A gold medal of the society was awarded to E. H. Wilson for his magnificent collection of photographs, now on exhibition in Horticultural hall. A similar award was given Mr. Wilson by the Royal Horticultural Society of England a few months ago.

It was voted to have a catalogue of books and periodicals in the library prepared. The work, it is estimated, will occupy two years, the library being the finest of its kind in the world.

At the annual meeting of the society Gen. S. M. Weld in his inaugural address stated that for the first time for some years the society's receipts were in excess of its expenditures, although prizes for two years had been paid in 1909. The larger receipts were mainly due to the increased receipts at the spring show, which were the largest in the society's history, the great attraction being the Japanese garden by R. & J. Farquhar & Co.

The reports of the various committees were read, those of T. D. Hatfield on plants and flowers and Wilfrid Wheeler on fruits being especially good.

The following among other committees were appointed by the trustees for 1910:

Finance—Walter Hunnewell, A. F. Estabrook, S. M. Weld.

Library—C. S. Sargent, George B. Dorr, E. B. Dane, C. S. Minot.

Lectures—W. J. Stewart, E. B. Wilder, H. F. Hall, W. P. Rich.

Prizes and exhibitions—J. K. M. L. Farquhar, Robert Cameron, W. N. Craig, M. A. Patten, C. S. Sargent, J. A. Pettigrew, William Sim.

Plants and flowers—T. D. Hatfield, Duncan Finlayson, Peter Fisher, S. J. Goddard, Thomas Roland, William Thatcher.

Fruits—E. B. Wilder, J. Willard Hill, James Wheeler.

Vegetables—J. B. Shurtleff, Jr., George D. Moore, J. W. Duncan.

Gardens—C. W. Parker, W. J. Stewart, A. H. Fewkes, T. D. Hatfield, Julius Heurlin, W. P. Rich, A. F. Barney, William Nicholson, F. E. Palmer, J. B. Shurtleff, Jr., James H. Bowditch, Wilfrid Wheeler.

Children's gardens—Mrs. R. G. Shaw, Mrs. Katherine Peabody, Mrs. E. M. Gill, Mrs. D. L. Pickman, Mrs. John E. Thayer, Miss Margaret Rand.

The lecture course commences January 8, when E. H. Wilson, of the Arnold Arboretum, will deliver a stereopticon lecture on "Plant Hunting in the Heart of China." These lectures will be given weekly until March 19, except on February 26, when the winter flower show will be held.

Various Notes.

Three greenhouses were burned at W. E. Doyle's Cambridge establishment during the recent cold snap, the cause being an overheated boiler.

George Cartwright spent a few days in Philadelphia last week.

E. H. Wilson will be the lecturer at the meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club January 18, on plant collecting in central China. The attendance will undoubtedly be the largest in the club's history. Tickets for the banquet are now ready. This will occur January 27. Tickets are to be had only from Peter M. Miller, 32 South Market street, Boston, and W. N. Craig, North Easton.

A. A. Pembroke, of North Beverly, is sending in some extra fine sweet peas to the Park Street Market.

Israel Rosnosky, representing the H. F. Michell Co., Philadelphia, and W. E. Cahill, with the Stumpp & Walter Co., New York, were visitors last week.

J. F. Flood & Co., of Dedham, are handling some extra fine carnations at present, and report their Christmas trade as the best on record.

J. K. M. L. Farquhar will lecture before the Bar Harbor (Me.) Horticultural Society January 6. W. N. CRAIG.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Current Comment.

Notwithstanding the usual apathy that follows the Christmas holidays in this city, combined with one of the worst snow storms since 1898, the florists had a fairly good week. The growers were harder hit because of the extra precautions necessary because of the zero weather. At the greenhouses of the Norwood Floral Co., Norwood, Nathan D. Pierce, manager, the gale ripped one of the large ventilators from its fastenings and hurled it against the glass roof.

Lawrence Hay brought in the first sweet peas of the season New Year's day. He has a large house just coming on. It is unusually fine.

In the recent assessment in the town of Cranston the following are of interest to florists: William Hay et ux, $14,580; Eunice Budlong, $10,025; Frank L. Budlong, $24,265; F. L. and J. A. Budlong 2nd, $71,895; J. A. Budlong & Sons Co., $143,140; James A. Budlong 2nd, $14,640; Melissa P. Budlong, $14,125.

Johnston Bros. furnished a Christmas wreath of laurel six feet in diameter for the Providence Journal Co.

A final dividend of fifteen per cent, making a total of eighteen, has been declared by the referee in bankruptcy in the case of M. J. Butler & Son, Newport.

George F. Fenner, Cranston, had the misfortune to have his fires burn out on the night of December 29, when the temperature unexpectedly went below zero. He lost a fine house of violets.

The sale of the Homogansett Greenhouse estate of about nine acres on Hamilton avenue, North Kingstown, under foreclosure of mortgage, was announced for January 5.

Louis Patry, with John F. Wood, fell down a flight of cellar stairs at the store December 29 and sprained his ankle.

Joseph F. Schellinger, who with his son conducts a range of greenhouses at Riverside, has been appointed by the city council of Providence as one of the weighers of cotton.

Carl Jurgens, Jr., began harvesting ice on the pond near his greenhouses at Newport last week for use in his cold storage plant, which has become such a factor in his method of treating lily of the valley pips.

Harry A. Bartlett, a fruit and violet grower of Scituate, and his wife were victims of a lone highwayman in the town of Johnston December 27. The robber pointed a revolver at the head of Mr. Bartlett and kept it there while he removed a diamond ring valued at $150 from the finger of Mrs. Bartlett. Then he relieved Mr. Bartlett of nearly $50 and made his escape.

John F. Wood has filed a claim with the local express company for the loss of a crate of fifty Lorraine begonias ordered for the Christmas trade from Stamford, Conn., but which were frozen.

Charles Hunt and two assistants worked all night December 25 on fifteen large pieces for funeral orders.

Lawrence Hay reports excellent sales on potted plants in hampers for the holidays.

William B. Hazard has given up his retail store at 112 Westminster street. He will handle his retail trade from his greenhouses for the present. The expiration of his lease, and the desire of a cigar store for the location, gave the landlord the opportunity of giving the rental a boost of $600 per year.

John F. Wood has been on the sick list, suffering from an attack of the grip.

LILIES FOR EASTER.

Is it possible to get giganteum lilies in for Easter that are now only coming through the soil in the pots? They are not unusually well rooted, but are fairly well rooted. If it is possible to have them in for Easter, what treatment should they have from now right along until Easter? How about giganteums that are standing some three or four inches high? Will they be in time for Easter? Also the same question in regard to Japanese multiflorum lilies, which seem to have been from the District of Gumma, and were quoted on and sold by the bulb merchant as Gumma multiflorum lilies. These lilies were potted up in 5-inch pots December 17. Can they be flowered for Easter? If so, what temperature, treatment, etc., will they require? The other lilies that I have mentioned are in 6-inch pots.

C. A. D. C.

Giganteum lilies which are now just showing through the pots will be too late for Easter, which comes on an extra early date this year. Those three to four inches high you may possibly get in season, but even they are a little late. Give them a temperature of 65 degrees at night, and as soon as flower buds show, raise this 5 degrees. You cannot expect to flower them without hard forcing. Use the syringe on them freely, and a watering with a weak solution of nitrate of soda will help them along.

The multiflorum potted so recently as December 17 you cannot possibly flower by Easter. It will be better to keep these and the giganteums just pushing through the pots in a cool house and retard them for Memorial day trade. Any flowering earlier you can probably make use of in your retail trade. You should be able to see and count buds on all

Niessen's News Column

We have received many complimentary letters from our customers about our holiday shipments. If we can please our customers at holiday times, we can surely do so the rest of the season.

Stock in every line is in fine condition and the market offers unusual values for the month of January. Quality never better, and prices comparatively low.

We wish to make special mention of our excellent stock of

White and Pink Killarney

We have thousands of them of a quality hard to beat. The best of them are 36 inches long.

Beauties

A large supply of all sizes. Our growers are in with a very heavy crop and will have plenty of them during the month of January. We can take care of your orders. Prices and quality will be satisfactory.

Carnations

Our supply consists principally of the better varieties, such as Winsor, Enchantress, Lawson, White Perfection, Beacon, Bassett, Victory, etc. We exercise the utmost care in selecting carnations for shipping orders, and we guarantee them to be perfectly fresh.

CATTLEYAS
Very choice flowers, $9.00 per doz.

GARDENIAS
$4.00 to $5.00 per doz.

SWEET PEAS

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

The conditions that influence the cut flower market are unusual for the season. The supply of flowers cropped for the holidays is still so large that prices are low, although there is plenty of business. The second half of last week was better than the first half. New Year's day was the least busy of the three. The present week has opened with the buying at times heavy, but the supply continues in excess of demand, and prices rule low.

Carnations have fallen more than anything else. Good red and pink are selling at half or less than a week ago, while white are not selling at all well. Violets have been quite scarce for several days; prices are firm. Cattleyas are in good supply. Some heavy buying has helped maintain values. Gardenias are not so fortunate. The price is unsteady in face of heavy receipts. Good valley is not abundant. There are lots of fine Easter lilies, but not so many callas. Freesia of splendid quality is in. White Trumpet Majors and Campernelles are familiar sights once more.

Greens when good are sellers, only the quality must be there. Wild smilax was quite scarce. The express companies appeared to consider it of least importance when resuming traffic.

Rose conditions favor the buyer. Excellent January values are being given as inducement to move the immense stock. I am told Mrs. Jardine is the strongest variety on the list, but there are so few Jardines that a fair comparison cannot be made with Killarney, My Maryland, or even Maid. White is a trifle weaker and red a trifle stronger than the pinks. Beauties are at half Christmas prices, with the medium grades least plentiful. The small flowers are in fair demand. Shipping is excellent.

The Holiday Business.

The curtailing of transient business, due to the snowstorm, was seriously felt in the local shops, balls, parties and dinners furnishing much of the work. H. H. Battles received for a sadder occasion some of the handsomest orders of the kind ever given in this city. These orders, the farewell tributes to a member of the family of a partner in Philadelphia's leading banking house, required 1,500 cattleyas alone, besides many other choice flowers.

J. J. Habermehl's Sons had decorations for balls and parties every night last week. Two of them, the Widener ball, December 30, and the Frazier ball on New Year's eve, were as elaborate as anything ever given in this city. A large number of Beauties were used in one, while a feature of the one known as the canary ball was the release of many golden songsters and confetti from large balls of pink roses just as the new year succeeded the old year.

In the Christmas Rush.

Three men were lunching at a counter in the center of the city, lunching quickly on beef broth and bread. The first man, a leader in the finance of flowers, spoke.

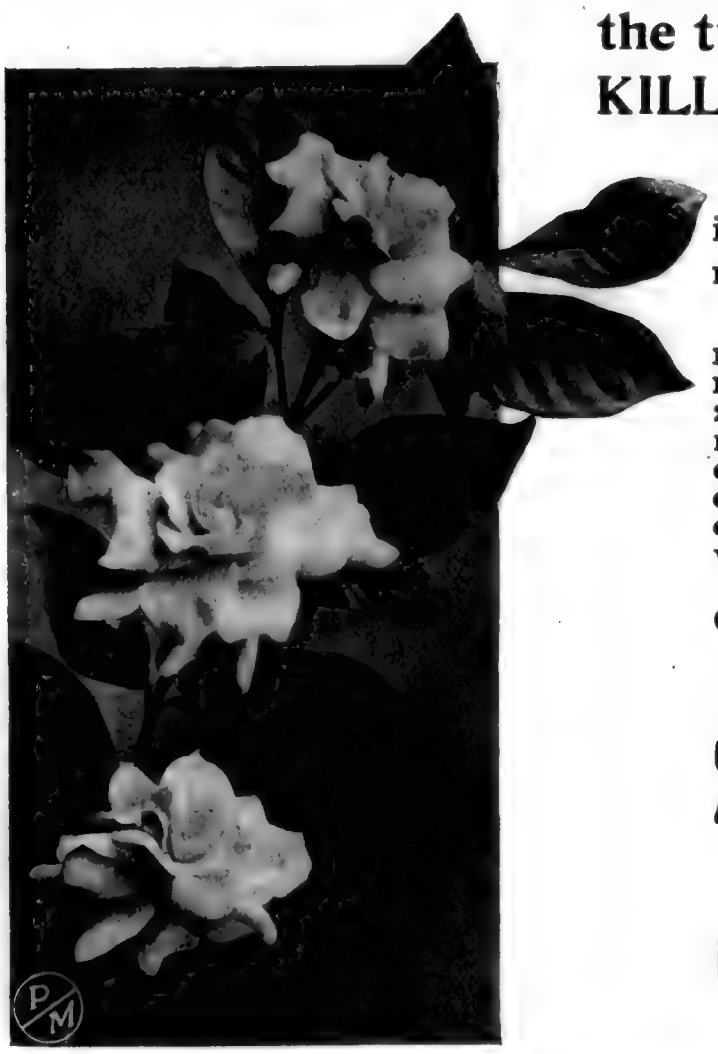
"I want to cut all this," he said, "and get out in the country and have a cow and fresh milk and chickens that lay eggs. I am sick of all this worry and fuss."

"I mean to spend Christmas in California four years from now," the second man said. He is a leading wholesaler, known all over the world of flowers. "This hard work don't suit me."

"Five years from now," the third man remarked, "I shall probably be right here, unless my editor finds a better man or the great Reaper interferes."

Various Notes.

Edward Reid says that his carnation growers held back nothing and profited by so doing.



Stokes' Seed Store has issued a beautiful catalogue garbed in Quaker gray.

Four Weeks and the Social Season of 1910 Will End

For the opera, balls, parties, etc., quantities of the choicest of flowers will be wanted. It is with satisfaction we find our growers are in splendid shape to care for this extra demand.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

New Year's evolved the anticipated volume of business and held its reputation as a good Saturday. Up to Friday morning there was no sign of the holiday celebration, but with mild, sunny weather and safe deliveries the plantsmen were busy and sold out anything good that had been left over from Christmas. Many handsome combination plant baskets of begonias, oranges, crotons and the flowering plants of every kind were utilized as New Year greetings. Cut flowers were abundant and dropped to half the Christmas rates, with a consequent encouraging demand.

The present week opens with fog and rain and a temperature of over 40 degrees. Monday's business was light and values tumbled. Beauties in quantity sold at $25 per hundred, and the best selected stock was not higher than 40 cents. Bride and Maid went down to 8 cents for the finest, and other roses retrograded in proportion. Carnations are coming now in shoals, and prices are lower, the best outside the real novelties seldom going over $4 per hundred. Violets have dropped, as was inevitable after the prolonged holiday season, and 75 cents is now the top. Cattleyas can be bought for from 50 cents down, and many a hundred cypripediums sell at $10. The market is filling daily with tulips, mignonette, pansies, narcissi and hyacinths. Valley is down and lilies to the low rates prevailing in November. There is an overstock of asparagus.

Various Notes.

Monday, January 10, the meeting of the Florists' Club will be held in the Grand Opera House building, at West Twenty-third street.

Much regret is expressed because of the severe accident last week to Charles Loechner, of the Yokohama Nursery Co. He is in the Norwegian hospital with a broken leg, and his recovery promises to be tedious, as considerable time elapsed after the fracture before he was relieved.

A big fire in the American Express building on Madison avenue came close to the handsome store of the A. T. Bunyard Co., which fortunately escaped the flames. The big store of C. A. Dards, on the same avenue, was also threatened.

The Cut Flower Exchange directors will hold their regular meeting January 8. The concern has had a prosperous year.

All the Brooklyn wholesale houses have cheerful reports to make of the Christmas and New Year's business. The City of Churches absorbed everything that came in and at satisfactory prices. Quite a little of the Philadelphia shipments come to Brooklyn daily.

In the downtown seed houses great preparations are under way for the anticipated boom in the early spring. March 27 Easter will be out of the way, and the record year of the seedsmen and nurserymen in full swing.

The ribbon specialists had a remarkable trade last year. Never were ribbons used so generally and profusely. The newer chiffons and novelties, especially, seemed to be popular. Hardly a plant or basket was sent out at Christmas that did not have artistic decoration of this kind.

In the retail stores the only complaint at the Christmas business was the difficulty experienced in having to double up the regular prices for roses and carnations. It is as hard as ever to make this necessity popular with the Christmas shopper. The tendency is to go back to cut flowers again, but the prices keep the plants in their handsome and reasonable combinations the popular gifts.

Robert G. Wilson says his stores and greenhouses in Brooklyn did by far their largest holiday trade. Mr. Wilson is a strong believer in the drawing power of a novel window display, and is always original.

The veteran, Alex. McConnell, enjoyed his greatest holiday trade. M. A. Bowe says the holiday trade beat all records. John F. Sharkey was delighted with his first Christmas in the retail line. Myer's Japanese branch was quite a drawing card on Madison avenue, and the main store did its usual increase. The volume of business done by Charles A. Dards in his stores on Madison avenue and uptown on Seventy-second street was in excess of any other year. The Flower Shop, on Forty-second street, an enterprise of recent date, also had a good holiday trade. The Smart Set Floral Co., at Broadway and Eighty-third street, found the first Christmas better than expected. Warendorff's three fine stores all told the same story of increased business. John King Duer had his best Christmas since the store was opened. Frank Good, the manager, produced many good window decorations, changing them daily. S. Masur, in lower Brooklyn, near the aristocratic heights where John Raynor lives, has had his busiest season to date. He occupied an extra store for the holidays, and hopes to be in his new store, double the size of his present one, in time for Easter.

Brown's new store in the Belnord is one of the sights of Upper Broadway, with its immense window—the observation buses stop to look at it.

Bowling.

December 30 the Flatbush Bowling Club held its annual prize contest, each member bringing a mysterious package and selection being made in the order of high scores. Edwards won first honors and found two roast chickens in his package. Riley, Al Schmutz and Henry Dailledouze each selected a box of cigars. Alfred Zeller drew silk suspenders, Louis Schmutz a cigar stand, Paul Dailledouze a pipe hanger, Wocker a handsome clock, Louis Schmutz, Jr., a knife.

At Astoria last week two New Year's turkeys were bowled for. In the high score contest Siebrecht and Miesem tied at 189 and in the roll off Miesem won. In the 100 pins contest Donaldson, Shaw and McMullen tied, and Donaldson won out, as usual. The scores were:

president of the Fleischman Baths and Fleischman Floral Co., brought an equity suit in the United States District Court, December 27, against the Carnegie Trust Company and other persons to compel them to account for and refund all money or property of Mr. Fleischman received by them. It was alleged that the Carnegie Trust Company received the equity in the Hotel Le Marquis property, valued at $150,000, rents aggregating $30,000 annually, and obtained payment in full of its debt of $64,250 to the detriment of other creditors. A petition in bankruptcy was filed against Mr. Fleischman November 30, 1908. In March, 1908, he conveyed the Hotel Le Marquis, valued at $525,000 and mortgaged for $404,000, to the National Center Realty Company, which he had caused to be incorporated with a capital stock of $60,000, but he managed and controlled the company and the hotel as his own personal property. When the petition in bankruptcy was filed against him he owed the Carnegie Trust Company $64,250, and when, March 22, 1909, the Center Realty Company transferred the hotel to John B. Moorehead, the Carnegie Trust Company's claim, which then amounted to $65,672, was included. Mr. Greenhall wants Chas. C. Dickinson, president of the Carnegie Trust Company, to account for $1,215 and John B. Stanchfield $17,802, or as much thereof as has been received by them.

POLYPODIUMS IN DWELLINGS.

Though the polypodiums are numerous and are found growing in almost all parts of the world, there are not many species that are suitable for house decorations. Some grow too large, others are by far too dwarf, while some are deciduous, their foliage being too soft to withstand the variable temperatures of the dwelling room. Still, there are more than enough species and varieties that may be selected from this extensive genus to suit the tastes of the most fastidious.

A considerable proportion of the species produce creeping rhizomes, which must be kept near the surface of the soil if the plants are to thrive satisfactorily; some, in fact, produce them on the surface, and these are well adapted for growing both in pots and baskets. The soil should be of a light, peaty nature, to enable the water to pass through it freely, and the drainage in all cases be ample, as but few of the species do well when overwatered. Most gardeners are well acquainted with the old Phlebodium aureum, which at one time played an important part in a collection of stove ferns at the great exhibitions. This is synonymous with Polypodium aureum, and was introduced as far back as 1742. Since that time many fine species have been introduced, and not a few forms have been raised in Europe. P. Mayi is one of these, says a writer in the Gardeners' Magazine. The fronds are similar in color to those of aureum, but they are of a fine, wavy character the whole of their length; the edges are quite crispate. This is undoubtedly one of the finest varieties yet introduced, and grows well in the greenhouse either in a pot or basket. P. Schneideri is another hybrid that should be found in every collection. The fronds are deeply cut and, having that beautiful glaucous tint found in P. aureum, they are most attractive. When well grown they attain a length of about two feet, and are borne on a wiry leaf-stalk of six inches in length. P. nigrescens in a small state is handsome.

P. Billardieri is a useful and ornamental greenhouse species from New Zealand. The fronds usually stand nearly upright, and in old plants they are deeply cut; in fact, the cutting reaches almost to the midrib. They are of a fine leathery texture, which enables them to withstand the sudden changes of temperature in the dwelling. P. glaucum and its varieties cristatum and magnificum are grand kinds for decorative purposes, their fronds being of a fine leathery texture. P. neriifolium and its varieties cristatum and furcatum are also ornamental in a young state, as their fronds are of that dark green, leathery texture so desirable for indoor decorations. P. irioides is a singular looking erect-growing species from New South Wales. The fronds are from a foot to eighteen inches in length and of a pale yellowish green color. P. irioides ramo-cristatum is a most useful variety, the fronds being beautifully crested. This is a variety raised in this country, and is a fine subject for decorative purposes, especially when well grown in 5-inch or 6-inch pots.

A POOR CROP OF LETTUCE.

Enclosed you will find one whole plant of Hanson lettuce and a leaf of Grand Rapids lettuce. Last year I had the best of success in growing lettuce. This year, in the same house, the crop is almost a failure. In preparing the beds, I first put in the bottom a few loads of well-rotted manure and watered it heavily. Next I put on the soil that I had used last year. In addition to that, I put on several wagon loads of muck sediment from the banks of a creek and then mixed all well together. The temperature in my house has never, even on sunny days, been over 75 degrees, and never below 40 degrees at night.

This is my second year in lettuce growing, and I thought that my crop would far exceed that of last winter, but even my first cutting was so light that it brought me small returns—only three or four ounces to the plant, while last winter I cut thousands that would weigh eight to ten ounces. J. M. B.

The samples were frozen in the mails, and, when received, it was impossible to tell anything from them. As J. M. B. does not mention any trouble with diseases, I am led to believe that the failure in the crop is not due to disease, but that he simply has small, poor lettuce, caused by a decidedly unfavorable condition of the soil.

It is hard to locate the exact cause of the trouble, not knowing the many circumstances to be considered. Perhaps that well-rotted manure had little real value. It may have been of poor quality, all the strength having been washed out of it; or, even if good, there may have been too small a quantity used.

The old soil, which several crops of lettuce had previously exhausted, was not the right kind to use, and muck or peat, although good to mix in soil to help it retain moisture, is as liable to be injurious as beneficial, by keeping the soil too soggy and wet. Is your soil in that condition? Have the boards in the bench bottoms swollen so as to shut the cracks tightly and stop the drainage? If so, get under there with a brace and bit and put lots of holes in for drainage.

It is probably out of the question for

The Market.

There seems to be general satisfaction among the retailers this year with regard to Christmas. Weather conditions were not ideal, it being quite cold, making the delivery of stock a little hazardous unless particularly well wrapped.

The plant trade eclipsed the cut flower trade, due somewhat to cut flower growers and wholesalers forcing up prices and withholding stock before Christmas. A nice blooming plant at $2 to $5 was more sought after than a dozen carnations or three or four Beauties. A majority of customers refused to pay $2 or $2.50 per dozen for carnations, and these were plentiful enough, too. Roses were equal to the demand and commanded good prices, but not so much in proportion as carnations; as it was, quite a few were left on hand the following day. Some of the store men report that business was a trifle better than a year ago, while a few say it was not so good, owing, perhaps, to local conditions regarding stock.

Violets were particularly scarce and could be had only in limited quantities, and then at $2 per hundred, wholesale.

Poinsettias moved well. The azaleas and cyclamens, however, were the favorites, while Begonia Lorraine followed closely.

Christmas trees did not prove profitable to the florists and the mistletoe was not as pretty as in former years. White holly sold well, as also did the green holly, which was scarce and higher priced than last year.

However, most of the growers and planters state that they are well satisfied with the amount of business done at Christmas and with the trade since then, for New Year's brought forth a good sale. Probably as many carnations were sold for New Year's as for Christmas, mostly on account of the reasonable price. E. S. K.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

The last week in the old year was a good one, from the florists' standpoint. Several social functions took place and large quantities of good stock were used up. At present there is a shortage in all kinds of stock, owing to the heavy demand and weather conditions. Business for New Year's day was a little better than last year. Cut flowers were mostly

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., J. C. Robinson, Waterloo, Neb.; First Vice-pres., M. H. Duryea, New York; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O.

THE returns from the early catalogues are said to have been unusually prompt this year.

THE southern business in vegetable seeds, mostly gardening varieties, is opening earlier than last year, and stronger.

PEAS are not so scarce but that some considerable lots are on offer at moderate price and with the vender's assurance of quality. Alaska is among the sorts offered.

J. WALTER EVANS, formerly with the Livingston Seed Co., Columbus, O., in company with L. O. V. Evans, has gone into business at Marysville, Cal., as the Marysville Flower and Seed Co.

THE daily newspapers of the big cities have been featuring this week the elopement of a grand-daughter of Robert Buist, Philadelphia, and record that one of Mr. Buist's chief aids in the hunt for the girl and her companion was Howard W. Earle.

THE 1910 catalogue of Arthur T. Boddington again contains a 16-page order sheet, containing in condensed form a list of everything in seeds in the book, with blank spaces for the customer's use. This order sheet worked so well in 1909 that it is used again.

L. H. ARCHIAS entertained the employees of the Archias' Seed Store corporation at a turkey dinner at his home New Year's day. The host was presented with a cut glass cream and sugar bowl. L. A. Kipping, vice-president, attended the farmers' meeting and corn show at Columbia, Mo., that week.

SPONTANEOUS combustion caused a fire in the second story of the building occupied by the Stocker Seed Co., Peoria, Ill., on the night of January 1. The blaze was discovered by a watchman, and extinguished by the firemen before the building was destroyed. Several thousand dollars' worth of seeds were lost.

NEBRASKANS' TROUBLES.

Writing on the last day of the old year, Wm. Emerson, manager for the Western Seed and Irrigation Co., had this to say of the recent experience of Nebraska seed growers:

"There is not much news in the way of notes for the trade, excepting that the Nebraska growers have been seriously put back with the harvesting of all late seed crops, also sweet and field corn, by the numerous heavy snow storms during the last six or seven weeks. Many of the crops are still in the fields, or at least a portion of them are, and some of them are buried in the snow. This will reduce the crops considerably and will result in reducing the deliveries of some varieties of sweet corn and field corn on contract orders. Many of the crops of pumpkin and squash were caught in the same way and it has been impossible for the growers to wash and dry these late seed crops under favorable conditions, many of which will probably be unfit for seed, causing short deliveries on a number of varieties of pumpkin and squash and in some cases total failures."

Bismarck Summer-flowering Stocks

(GILLYFLOWER)

Golden Ball—Canary Yellow

NOVELTY 1910

For the Gardener interested in Cut Flowers, this is just the right thing. The Best Novelty in the World. The Bismarck Summer-flowering Stock makes cone-shaped bushes, about 3 feet high, with wonderfully large, canary yellow clusters. It blooms throughout the entire summer season and even into the late fall. This Bismarck Summer Stock produces about 80% double flowers and is indispensable for the artistic work of the modern florist. When placed on the market in the form of a pot plant, it has no equal. This Season's Best Novelty. 1 packet, 15c; 10 packets, $1.25; 100 packets, $11.00.

Bismarck Stocks Snowball, Snow White Novelty of 1909

This new kind has the same good qualities as the above mentioned novelty. The flowers are very large, snow white and are splendid as cut flowers and for sale on the market. 1 packet, 15c; 1000 seeds, 50c; ¼ oz., $1.50; 1 oz., $5.00.

Giant Summer Stocks Gloria, Bright Blood Red—Excelsior Class.

Produces panicles of great length, bright and blood red; the flowers are gigantic. Great novelty. Fine for cut flowers. 1 packet, 15c; 1000 seeds, 65c.

Summer Stocks Himmelsauge (Eye of the Sky).

Belonging to the dwarf class; novelty; wonderful light blue color; the best for pot culture; produces from 80% to 85% double flowers. 1000 seeds, 80c; ¼ oz., 90c.

Dresden Summer Stocks, with large Blossoms and Everblooming.

Best for cut flowers. 1, apple blossom; 2, dark blue; 3, light blue; 4 flesh colored; 5, dark blood red; 6, chamois; 7, soft rose; 8, purple carmine; 9, red brown; 10, crimson; 11, canary yellow; 12, snow white.
Each color separate, 1000 seeds, 25c; ¼ oz., 60c; 1 oz., $2.00. All colors mixed, 1000 seeds, 20c; ¼ oz., 50c; 1 oz., $1.60.

Erfurt Summer Stocks, with Large Blossoms; Best for Groups.

1, brilliant rose; 2, carmine; 3, crimson; 4, dark violet; 5, dark blood red; 6, flesh colored; 7, canary yellow; 8, light blue; 9, aurora colored; 10, pure white.
Each color separate, 1000 seeds, 25c; ¼ oz., 60c; 1 oz., $2.00. All colors mixed, 1000 seeds, 20c; ¼ oz., 50c; 1 oz., $1.60.

English Summer Stocks De Luxe Mixture, Seeds from the Open Ground.

¼ oz., 35c; 1 oz., $1.10.

EUROPEAN NOTES.

Agricultural Seed Trade Association.

At the annual general meeting of the Agricultural Seed Trade Association of the United Kingdom, Edward Sherwood (of Hurst & Son), the president, occupied the chair. Representatives from many of the leading firms were present and took part in the proceedings, including Peter Lawson & Son, Edinburgh; A. Cross & Son, Glasgow; Bell & Bieberstedt, Leith; Le May, London; E. P. Dixon & Sons, Hull; C. Sharpe, Sleaford; Dickson, Brown & Tait, Manchester; Dickson & Robinson, Manchester, etc. One of the principal subjects discussed was the appointment of an analyst to test seeds for members of the association. Herbert Le May pointed out that the present practice of sending seeds to Zurich or Copenhagen to be tested was unsatisfactory. He had approached the Board of Agriculture, suggesting that an analyst should be appointed by the Board, but no progress had been made. It was decided to approach Professor Biffen, of Cambridge, to ascertain if he was willing to undertake analytical work for the association.

Honor to James Grieve.

An interesting function took place in Edinburgh, December 14, when the nurserymen and seed merchants of that city met together to honor James Grieve, of James Grieve & Sons, on the occasion of his fifty years' connection with the Edinburgh nursery trade. D. W. Thomson, on behalf of 168 subscribers, presented Mr. Grieve with a gold watch and chain and a purse of sovereigns. In a genial, happy vein he referred to Mr. Grieve's mani-

Burpee's Seeds are Grown by Burpee!

As a rule, this is absolutely true! Those varieties of seeds that cannot be produced to the highest standard of excellence upon our own farms are raised under private contract, subject to our personal inspection during growth, in such sections of America and Europe as long experience has shown to be best adapted to their proper development. We buy no seeds upon the open market—and yet this rule occasionally has a necessary exception. The exception this season is in the case of Garden Peas, for the reason explained at bottom of page 80.

fold labors as a nursery employee, as a nursery manager and latterly as an employer, with special reference to his work as a hybridist. Mr. Grieve suitably replied and the proceedings were enlivened by toasts and songs.

The death is announced of M. Phillipe Rivoire, Marseilles, France, a well known chrysanthemum grower.

French horticulturists are arranging an international rose congress of an important character, to be held in Paris during the summer of 1910.

A Peter Barr Medal.

The narcissus and tulip committee of the Royal Horticultural Society, London, has decided to perpetuate the memory of the late Peter Barr by instituting a medal to be called the Peter Barr medal, to be given annually in some way connected with the daffodil, and to use the balance of the subscriptions to provide for the maintenance of a child in connection with the Gardeners' Orphan Fund, as this was an institution in which he had taken a life-long interest.

The mistletoe is now (December 17) in evidence in huge piles in all our markets. The supplies are drawn principally from Normandy, France, the annual shipments amounting to 700 or 800 tons. Probably 100,000 Christmas trees will pass through Covent Garden before Christmas, in all sizes, from one foot up to thirty feet. One consignment of 7,000 trees, four to five and one-half feet, has just come in from Germany. Holly is abundant and well berried. Bee.

ADULTERATION OF SEEDS.

The U. S. Department of Agriculture issued, December 14, a bulletin on "The Adulteration of Forage-Plant Seeds," by F. H. Hillman, assistant in the seed laboratory. The subject is introduced as follows:

"Farm seed is considered to be adulterated when it contains seed of inferior kind or quality in excessive quantity. When inferior seed is present in considerable quantity it is naturally presumable that intentional adulteration has been practiced.

"The misbranding of seed, or its sale under the name of a different kind, may be intentional or it may be the result of error in labeling. Its effect, however, so far as the purchaser is concerned, is the same as adulteration.

"Some of the plants whose seeds are used as adulterants have more or less forage value and are widely distributed in agricultural regions where farm seeds are produced. For this reason a comparatively small quantity of their seed is likely to appear in seed crops merely as an incident to the culture of these crops. When the small extent of such

Ward's Lily Bulbs

"NOT HOW CHEAP— BUT HOW GOOD"

Horseshoe Brand Products

Good advertisements afford a more liberal education than is generally supposed. Those who believe in advertising are on the road to success if they practice what they preach in the proper manner. If you are a believer, be a good one and patronize the advertiser. It will pay you because advertisers are progressive people and the kind you want to deal with.

Of course, advertised goods must have merit, or the effort is useless. Horseshoe Brand bulbs have merit and it pays us to advertise them. Ask the man who grows them and confirm this, then write us for prices.

incidental occurrence is conspicuously exceeded, intentional adulteration is strongly suggested. An illustration of this is seen in the relation of yellow trefoil to red clover and alfalfa. The trefoil grows spontaneously in most regions where red clover seed and alfalfa seed are produced, and some trefoil plants are likely to appear in these crops. While trefoil is a low-growing plant, mostly escaping the mower when the crop is cut, some fruiting stems are likely to be harvested with the crop. The admixture of the trefoil seed with that of the crop is further aided by the fact that the trefoil has a long seeding period, and consequently its seed may appear in clover or alfalfa seed harvested at any time within the usual period during which harvesting may occur. Thus the appearance of a trace of trefoil in red clover or alfalfa seed does not indicate intentional or serious adulteration. Again, while Canada bluegrass grows spontaneously with Kentucky bluegrass it matures so much later than the latter that only very immature seed can appear incidentally in the harvested Kentucky bluegrass seed. The latter, however, as offered to the trade often contains mature Canada bluegrass seed in quantity varying from ten per cent to complete substitution. This is evidently intentional adulteration.

"As a rule, successful seed adulteration is made possible by the similarity existing between the inferior seed and that of the crop seed with which it is used. If often happens, therefore, that the adulterant used is the seed of some plant very closely related to the adulterated crop seed. The dealer who adulterates seed bases his faith in the success of the deception upon the very careless examination made or the absence of any examination of the seed by the average purchaser, including the majority of retail dealers. If, before purchasing, a careful examination of the seed offered for sale was made by all buyers, guided by a knowledge of the various adulterants used, seed adulteration would soon cease.

"The combination of seeds of standard farm crops commanding uniformly different prices in the seed market constitutes adulteration when the mixture is sold at the price of the more expensive seed. This is illustrated by the combination of redtop and timothy offered as redtop.

"Another form of adulteration is the use of dead seed of the kind offered for sale. Such dead seed may have lost its vitality from advanced age or from unfavorable conditions of harvesting or of storage, or it may consist of light screenings in which the seed germs never developed. Old seed having very low vitality or none at all doubtless is often offered for sale. Considerable worthless shriveled red clover and alfalfa screenings are imported each year for use in adulterating red clover and alfalfa seed.

"One of the commonest and most objectionable forms of adulteration is the use of low-grade screenings, consisting chiefly of miscellaneous weed seeds. In many instances such adulterants have been purchased in foreign countries. The statement, often made, that low-grade weedy screenings are imported for the purpose of recleaning before being marketed is without foundation, because the quantity of good seed to be secured would cost the dealer more, usually very much more, than the same quantity of good seed produced in this country. Such low-grade seed, therefore, is unquestionably imported exclusively for use either in competition with or as an adulterant of higher grade seed.

"Not all the consequences experienced by the consumer which arise from seed adulteration can be anticipated, but chief among the disadvantages are a reduced stand of the desired crop, a monetary loss in paying too much for the quantity of good seed actually secured, a loss in connection with transportation charges, which are higher than they should be for the actual quantity of good seed transported, and the securing of an undesired crop which, if from miscellaneous screenings, may do permanent injury to the farm owing to the noxious weeds introduced. Many indirect losses and disappointments resulting from the use of adulterated seed are experienced by progressive farmers who may unwittingly sow such seed."

EXPOSITION GRADE. This is an extra fancy grade of Berlin crowns. There are never enough of them to supply the demand. Out of Mr. Reimschneider's entire growing, he usually has only 50,000 to 75,000 of this grade, which is evidence of the care with which they are selected. In cases of 2000 crowns, at $30.00 per case.

PERFECTION GRADE. This is a true Berlin, extra selected, 3-year-old straight, long, clean crown with long, fibrous roots. Under proper treatment, they force out with tall racemes, bearing the maximum number of large bells, free from decay at the bottom. The foliage is ample but not too abundant. In cases of 1000 pips, at $13.00 per case.

HOLSATIA GRADE. These are suitable for later forcing, or for cold storage purposes, and are highly recommended to seedsmen. Very fine selected 3-year-old Hamburg Pips, very heavy roots, extra strong growth. Will hold over well in cold storage and produce good flowers the following fall. In cases of 2500 pips, at $30.00 per case.

seeds most commonly adulterated, and of the adulterants, with pictures of both, and concludes with the following summary:

"Serious and intentional adulteration of important forage-plant seeds is frequently practiced. Seed is sometimes misbranded.

"It is possible for purchasers to detect most kinds of adulteration or misbranding of farm seeds.

"In detecting adulteration it is necessary to know what kinds of seeds are subject to adulteration, the means employed in adulteration, and the distinguishing characters of both the crop and the adulterant seeds.

"A cheap magnifier suffices in distinguishing crop seeds from other kinds of seeds used as adulterants.

"A simple germinating test discloses the use of dead crop seed as an adulterant.

"The illustrations used in this bulletin were prepared especially to enable purchasers of farm seeds to distinguish seeds subject to adulteration and those used as adulterants.

"It is not the purpose of the bulletin to enable one to determine the extent of adulteration in each instance, but rather the more important fact of its existence.

"A little effort on the part of the purchasers of seeds directed to the detection of adulteration or misbranding will prevent many instances of crop failure.

"It is advisable to make tests for adulteration at home; otherwise the suspected seed may be sent to the Seed Laboratory at Washington or to the cooperative laboratories in Missouri, Nebraska, or Oregon. A report on the matter of adulteration will be made promptly and without charge."
